FOREWORD

It is with great pleasure that we present the 2014 Edition of The Official Catholic Directory®. In addition to our comprehensive coverage of the institutions and clergy associated with the Catholic Church in the U.S., this volume features exclusive articles of interest to the Church. One insightful piece chronicles Pope Francis' first year as Pontiff, his impact on the Vatican, the Church and the world. Also included are features on the lives of personal piety and service of recently canonized Pope John XXIII and Pope John Paul II; the diverse first class of 19 new cardinals elevated by Pope Francis; the use of new technology and social media for evangelization; the "health" of the Church in the U.S.; and our annual Year in Review.

Along with Volume One, we have included The Official Catholic Directory, Part II in your subscription. Produced in the fall, the supplement contains updates and new listings not present in the main volume, along with the archdioceses and dioceses of the world reprinted with permission from the Vatican.

We strive to provide a thorough and accurate portrait of the Catholic Church in America and to continually improve this unique and valuable reference tool. This directory owes a debt of gratitude to the ecclesiastical authorities and diocesan officials who helped make The Official Catholic Directory® possible. We thank them for their cooperation and invaluable assistance.

Sincerely,

Robert Docherty

The Seal of P.J. Kenedy & Sons
The Official Catholic Directory

Significance

The shield is the central part of a heraldic device, which is more commonly known as a coat of arms. If that shield is enclosed within a body of text, or other type of surrounding configuration, the device becomes known as a seal, yet it is the shield portion of the design that is the most important, and that which is described technically as the blazon. As the design is examined, it must be remembered that by heraldic tradition the design is described (blazoned) as if being done by the bearer with the shield being worn on the arm. Therefore, the terms dexter and sinister will be reversed as the design is viewed from the front.

The shield of the seal for The Official Catholic Directory has been designed to reflect the character and heritage of this publication of P.J. Kenedy & Sons.

The shield is in two major portions. The right half (sinister impalement) is composed of the blue shield on which are seen a silver tree, two candles (in silver or white) in their candleholders (of gold or yellow) and an open book, edged in gold and with a red bookmark. These symbols have been used over the years as the sign of the P.J. Kenedy & Sons publishing organization. These are the traditional symbols of knowledge and learning, so appropriate to a publisher.

The other side of the shield (the dexter impalement) is composed of a silver (white) field on which is seen a red cross, throughout, and a gold eagle. These symbols, combined with the field of the sinister impalement, are represented in the color of the flag of the United States of America and the eagle, the symbol of the United States. The cross represents Christianity and all of this combines to signify that The Official Catholic Directory annually reports on the Catholic Church in the United States.

The shield is surrounded by a laurel wreath of excellence and is enclosed within the legend that states the name of the company, the name of the publication and date (1817) of its founding.

Saving a legacy

A century-and-a-half bridges the artists whose stained glass graces the narthex, aisles and sanctuary of Chapel of Christ the Good Shepherd, Immaculate Conception Seminary in South Orange, NJ.

Originally manufactured in the painterly Munich style by the Tyrolese Glass Art Studio of Innsbruck, Austria, the condition of the windows was deplorable when rescued from Queen of Angels, a redundant church in Newark, NJ. Time and neglect had taken their toll. Many might have considered the panels beyond recovery, but client Msgr. Joseph R. Reilly, Rector / Dean, thought otherwise.

Half-a-year of patience plus exacting conservation methods revealed the windows' beauty and superb quality. Rambusch then presented Msgr. Reilly with three original designs for their adaptive use. After an engaging round of discussions, the client decided on the final groupings and placement.

Our modern-day glass artists continued the work of their forebears using the finest mouth-blown German glass as ground for the antique scenes. They employed the same time-honored techniques of etching, tracing, matting and shading to complete the ensemble.

Inspired artists, talented craftspeople, and above all an educated client combined taste, education and skill to span a century-and-a-half of stained glass expression.

We strive always to heed Christ's Gospel mandate to care for the poor. Thanks to the tireless work of in-country missionaries, clergy, churches, like-minded organizations and compassionate individuals, we are able to provide food, housing, fresh water, healthcare, education, micro-enterprise projects and emergency relief to those who need it most. Through all of us working together in collective Christian charity, we express God's love and infuse new hope into the lives of the destitute.

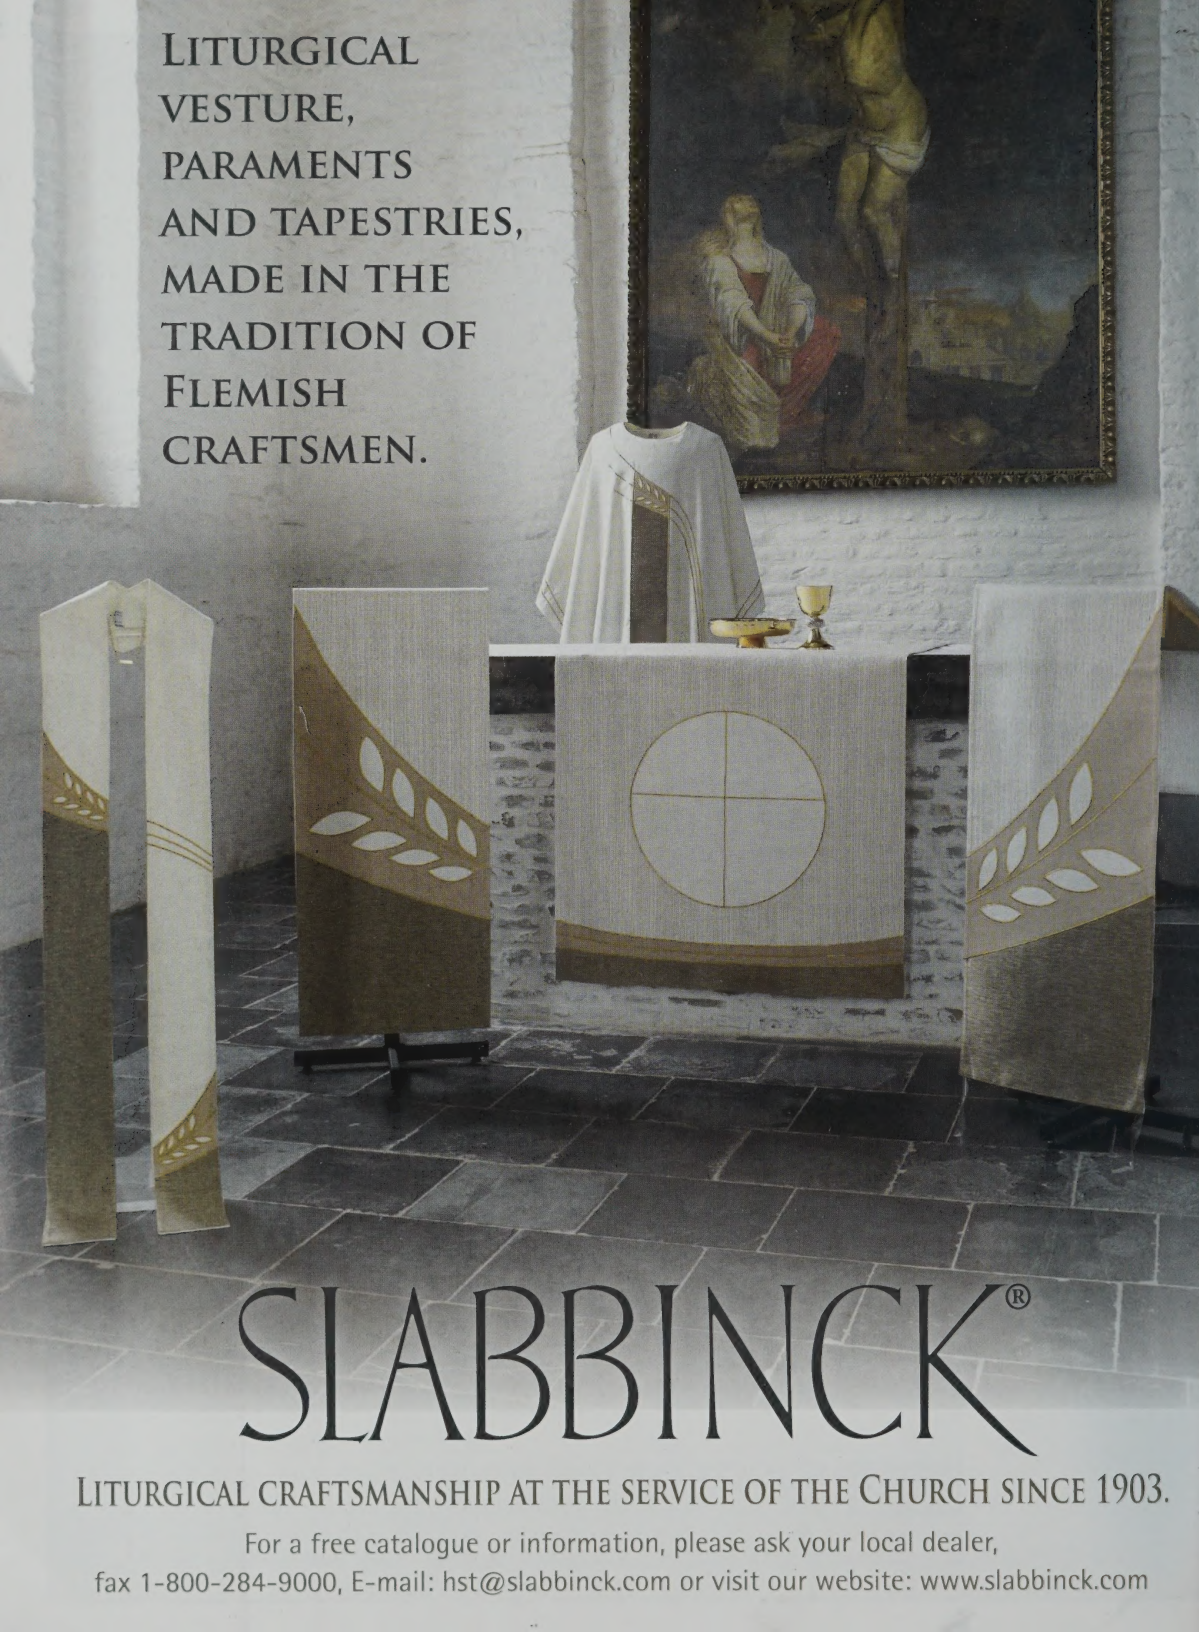
Food For The Poor is the largest international relief organization in the country, according to The Chronicle of Philanthropy. Since 1982, we have supplied more than $11 billion worth of aid and built more than 91,000 housing units for poor families. Committed to being good stewards of every gift we receive, our fundraising and other administrative costs comprise less than 5% of our expenses. More than 95% of all donations go directly to those in need.



We seek to reflect Christ's unconditional love in our work, which links the church of the First World with the church of the Third World by serving the materially poor and the poor in spirit. We use Matthew 25:40 as our guideline:

Cross Catholic Outreach: Empowering Local Missions to fight Global Poverty

By Msgr. Ted Bertagni

In parishes and missions throughout the developing world, dedicated priests, nuns and Catholic lay missionaries are fulfilling the Holy Father's call to demonstrate Christ's compassion to families in desperate need. Too often, though, their efforts to serve are hindered by inadequate resources. More could be done if sources of food, medicines and other necessities were more readily available.

American Catholics with a heart for the poor often express a desire to help, but they are unaware of the specific needs — or they lack an effective way to respond. This is where Cross Catholic Outreach fills a critical role. Its expertise in purchasing commodities, shipping into foreign ports and monitoring projects has opened up an incredibly efficient way for American Catholics to support Catholic missions overseas.

© L'Osservatore Romano

Cross Catholic Outreach has also become extremely successful at implementing large scale mission projects with funds American Catholics provide.

For example, Father Fabian Hevi, SMA, came to Cross Catholic Outreach with a request for help with a major water project in Kenya. The Diocese of Lodwar was suffering from extreme drought conditions that threatened the lives of indigenous Turkana tribespeople. With the help of its U.S. benefactors, Cross Catholic Outreach provided the funds and support Fr. Fabian needed to achieve his goals. Now the wells have been dug and fresh water is flowing.

A team of Catholic "Outreach Priests" travel to U.S. parishes to share project proposals like this and to celebrate the successes of missions accomplished.

"The goal of our Outreach Priest program is to highlight the impressive mission work being accomplished by Catholic missions overseas," explains Cross Catholic Outreach President Jim Cavnar. "As parishes learn more about the work of the Church abroad, they often want to support those outreaches. Cross Catholic gives them a simple way to accomplish this. We give them specific, tangible ways to get involved, and then we show them the actual impact of the ministries they have made possible."

Through a special collaboration with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum, the ministry also assists the Holy Father with his works of mercy, including responses to global disasters. This unique relationship was recently praised by San Francisco Archbishop Salvatore Cordileone, one of 82 bishops and archbishops in the U.S and abroad who have endorsed Cross Catholic Outreach.

"Your work with the Pontifical Council Cor Unum is a strong endorsement of your partnership with the work of the Universal Church," Archbishop Cordileone said. "By providing hope to the faithful overseas by feeding the hungry, clothing the naked, delivering medical relief to the sick, shelter to the homeless and through self-help projects, you are embodying the Papal Encyclical Deus Caritas Est."

Denver Archbishop Samuel J. Aquila similarly praised Cross Catholic Outreach, saying: "Your partnering and collaboration with many different organizations in many countries, from parishes and religious orders to the Pontifical Council Cor Unum, is an authentic and inspiring display of the unity of the Catholic Church and the real solidarity among her children."

As 'Pope of Mercy,'

Francis Delivers Both Symbols and Substance

BY JOHN L. ALLEN JR.

If hypocrisy is the tribute vice pays to virtue, perhaps celebrity is the homage a culture often given to hype and preening offers to humility. That may be the only way to explain how Pope Francis finds himself, after one year in office, in the ironic position of being the most celebrated humble man alive.

The acclaim Francis has garnered is rooted to a large extent in perceptions that despite having risen to the pinnacle of spiritual power, he remains a strikingly simple figure with a deep affection for ordinary people.

Before Jorge Mario Bergoglio of Argentina stepped out onto the balcony overlooking St. Peter's Square on March 13, 2013, it was not at all clear that the Pope of the Catholic Church was destined to become the most popular human being on the planet and the new Nelson Mandela in terms of media attitudes, meaning a figure almost universally recognized by pundits and commentators as a towering moral authority.

Asked one year later if such an outcome seemed likely at the time, Cardinal Daniel DiNardo of Galveston-Houston, who took part in the conclave that elected Francis, was about as unequivocal as possible: "No, no, no, and no," he told the Boston Globe. And yet that's precisely what happened, and remarkably quickly.

In every corner the world where public opinion can be scientifically measured, Francis has the kind of approval ratings that politicians and celebrities crave. A CNN poll in December 2013 found that he enjoyed an 88% favorability rating among American Catholics. The new pope has graced almost every magazine cover in the world, including deeply secular publications such as Vanity Fair and Rolling Stone. He has more than 12 million followers on Twitter, and a European media study found he was the most Googled figure in the world for calendar year 2013.

Pope Francis greets children after celebrating Mass at St. Anne's Parish within the Vatican March 17. The new pope greeted every person leaving the small church and then walked over to meet people waiting around St. Anne's Gate.

The acclaim Francis has garnered is rooted to a large extent in perceptions that despite having risen to the pinnacle of spiritual power, he remains a strikingly simple figure with a deep affection for ordinary people.

This is a pope, after all, who knelt in silent prayer to wait for the crowd in St. Peter's Square and around the world to pray for him before he imposed a blessing after his election. Leaving the Sistine Chapel after his election, he spurned the chauffer-driven Mercedes papal limousine to hop on a shuttle bus with the other cardinals. He returned to the Casa del Clero, the residence for clergy in Rome where he'd stayed prior to the conclave, to pack his own bag and pay his own bill.

After the conclave he opted not to move into the cavernous

Left: Pilgrims gather for the closing Mass of World Youth Day celebrated by Pope Francis on Copacabana beach in Rio de Janeiro July 28. An estimated 3 million people attended -- one of the largest crowds in the history of World Youth Day.

Right: During the service, the pope commissioned an estimated 3 million people in attendance to become missionaries without borders.

papal apartment, famously crying out that it has space for 300 people, choosing instead to settle in room 201 of the Domus Santa Marta, the modest hotel on Vatican grounds. He even picked up the phone to call his newspaper delivery man back in Buenos Aires to say he wouldn't be returning so he needed to cancel his subscription.

In a session with the media three days after his election, Pope Francis famously articulated his dream of a "poor church for the poor."

Those gestures and utterances arose naturally from the personality of Jorge Mario Bergoglio, but they also had the effect of creating a massively appealing popular narrative. Fascination with Francis has created a new sense of missionary possibility and momentum for Catholicism, even if the evidence remains mixed about precisely how much of a "Francis Effect" can be detected in measures such as Mass attendance, demand for other sacraments, and the number of people who identify as Catholic.

One measure of Francis' popularity came in July when he traveled to Brazil to celebrate World Youth Day. That trip reached a crescendo when the pope twice attracted crowds in excess of three million people to Rio de Janeiro's Copacabana Beach, shattering the attendance record at the world's most famous stretch of sand and surf held by the Rolling Stones.

The Brazil trip also brought an airborne press conference in which Francis uttered the most-quoted line of 2013, speaking about his attitude when he meets a homosexual person: "Who am I to judge?"

Another index of how fêted Francis has become is the body of urban myths that has grown up around him, such as the false rumor that he exits the Vatican incognito at night to deliver sandwiches to homeless people around St. Peter's Square. It's been denied repeatedly by the pope, yet it lives on in cyber-space.

Looking back over even a partial list of iconic moments delivered by Francis during his first year, it's not difficult to understand why the world has been so charmed.

- In November 2013, Francis embraced Vinicio Riva, an Italian man whose face and body are terribly scarred by a genetic disorder, and who says that people normally go out of their way to avoid him. Riva later said the encounter had helped restore his faith.
- In June, Francis invited a 17-year-old boy with Down's syndrome named Alberto di Tullio to join him for a ride on the Popemobile. The moment left both Alberto and his father in tears.
- During Holy Week in March, Francis visited Rome's Casa del Marmo incarceration center for juvenile offenders, washing the feet of 12 inmates during a Holy Thursday service. In a break with tradition, two of the inmates were Muslims and two were women.
- In August, Francis met with a group of youngsters from two Italian dioceses and posed for a picture with several of them afterwards, taken by one of youngsters with a cell phone held at arm's length. It quickly went viral as the first papal "selfie".

Pope Francis greets Alberto di Tullio, 17, after letting him sit in the popemobile chair during the general audience in St. Peter's Square at the Vatican June 19. Di Tullio, who has Down syndrome, was treated to a literal spin in the popemobile when the pope turned the youth around in the white papal chair.

- In October, another shot of Francis became a global sensation when a little boy wandered onstage during a Vatican ceremony and clung to the pope when officials tried to gently steer him away. Francis embraced the boy and took his presence in stride, at one point reaching down to give him a pat on the head while he continued to deliver his talk.
- In December, Francis welcomed three homeless men and their dog – named Marley, by the way, for the reggae icon Bob Marley – into the Vatican to share his birthday breakfast.

Yet this isn't a pope who's all sizzle and no steak, meaning that he's all about style and tone but weak on substantive follow-through. On the contrary, beneath his simple exterior lies the mind of an extraordinarily sophisticated Jesuit leader who's been wielding authority in the Church for most of his adult life.

Francis was elected on a reform mandate, and he's quickly moved forward on a series of fronts.

On collegiality, meaning the effort to involve local churches around the world more thoroughly in decision-making in Rome, Francis created a "G8" council of cardinal advisors made up almost entirely of residential cardinals from every continent in April 2013 to serve as his kitchen cabinet. He also retooled the Synod of Bishops to make it more participatory, including dispatching a survey to local churches prior to a looming meeting dedicated to the family in October 2014, and introduced a new two-stage process to make sure there's time to consult the base before reaching final conclusions.

On finances, Francis has moved to foster a greater transparency and accountability. Shortly after taking office he created commissions to study both the Vatican bank and the broader administrative and economic structures of the Holy See. In March 2014 he unveiled a sweeping reform of the Vatican's financial operations, including a new Secretariat for the Economy to enforce fiscal discipline; a Council for the Economy made up of both clergy and qualified laity to set policy and an independent Auditor General. For his new financial czar he turned to Cardinal George Pell of Sydney, Australia, a tough and determined proponent of proper financial management, a choice that told insiders the pope means business.

On the child sexual abuse scandals that have rocked Catholicism, Francis created a new "Pontifical Commission for the Protection of Minors" in December 2013. Three months later he announced the first set of leaders for that body, a line-up that included Cardinal Seán P. O'Malley of Boston, who has a global reputation as a reformer, and an Irish survivor of clerical abuse named Marie Collins. All told, four of the eight leaders tapped to head the new commission are women, a choice that also reflects the pope's commitment to promoting female leadership in the church.

On personnel, Francis has moved to assemble a team in the Vatican that shares his vision. One key appointment came in October 2013, when Francis elevated Italian Archbishop Pietro Parolin, widely regarded as the most impressive Vatican diplomat of his generation, to be his new Secretary of State. Parolin became a cardinal in February 2014.

In terms of teaching, Francis' first year in office brought one encyclical, Lumen Fidei, released in June, although it was based on a draft prepared by his predecessor, emeritus Pope Benedict XVI. Francis' most important text came in late November with his apostolic exhortation Evangelii Gaudium, hailed by many observers as the Magna Carta of his papacy. Beyond the pope's strong language both on social justice and church reform, the heart of the document is his call for the Catholic Church to be a "field hospital" in which the wounds of humanity are cured.

Standing back from the details of an extraordinarily busy first year in office, one can spot three emerging pillars of Francis' papacy, meaning three areas where his interest seems to be the most acute and where his legacy is therefore likely to be the most profound.

First, this is a pope who wants to make clear that leadership in the Catholic Church is fundamentally about service.

Pope Francis underscored that idea during a June 21 speech to nuncios, meaning papal ambassadors around the world who play a key role in picking new bishops. On that occasion, Francis said that he does not want leaders "with the psychology of a prince," but rather pastors "who carry the smell of their sheep" because they're close to the ordinary people they're called to serve. Francis returned to the point during his first Christmas address to the Roman Curia, insisting that without a spirit of service the structures of the Church become no more than a "heavy bureaucratic customs house."

In effect, what Francis seems to want is that when people look at the symbols of authority in the Catholic Church, such as Roman collars and pectoral crosses, he wants them to associate those symbols with service rather than power and privilege.

Second, Francis is committed to a missionary vision of Catholicism, memorably expressed in his insistence that the Church must get "out of the sacristy and into the streets."

That sense of mission obviously includes the invitation to explicit faith in Jesus Christ. In one of his now-famous daily homilies at morning Mass in the Domus Santa Marta on Feb. 21, 2014, Francis insisted that faith is not a matter of "ideologies" or "abstract theories," but "a meeting with Jesus Christ."

More broadly, the pope's vision of mission seems to include both a personal and a social dimension. On the personal level, it means having one's eyes open to see the wounded person who has a special need of God's healing love. His outreach to people during his public appearances is, in this sense, intended to set a standard for what Christian mission looks like in practice.

On the social level, Francis is clearly committed to the pro-life teachings of the Catholic Church, and he sees them as organically linked to the "social gospel," meaning solidarity with the poor and with immigrants, opposition to war, concern for the environment, and the broad promotion of social justice.

That drive for the social gospel can be glimpsed in his three highest-profile political and social stands during his first year in office:

- A July 8 trip, his first outside Rome, to the southern Mediterranean island of Lampedusa, the major point of arrival for impoverished migrants from Africa and the Middle East seeking to reach Europe. Francis laid a wreath in the sea to commemorate the estimated 20,000 people who died during the past two decades trying to make the crossing, and blasted what he called the "globalization of indifference" to immigrants.
- A July 25 outing to a Brazilian slum called Varginha, known as the "Gaza Strip" of Rio de Janeiro because of bloody clashes Pope Francis blesses a wreath before tossing it into the Mediterranean Sea off the coast of Lampedusa, Italy, July 8. During his visit to the island, the pope memorialized an estimated 20,000 African immigrants who have died in the past 25 years trying to reach a new life in Europe.

between police and drug gangs. Francis told the poorest of the poor that "the Church is with you," and also warned political leaders that no pacification campaign will succeed if it's not rooted in a commitment to justice.

- A Sept. 7 invitation to all 1.2 billion Catholics of the world to pray for peace in Syria, at a time when the drums of war were beating in the major Western capitals. In context, the pope's gesture was seen as a clear statement of opposition to the idea of using force to bring down the regime of President Bashar al-Assad.

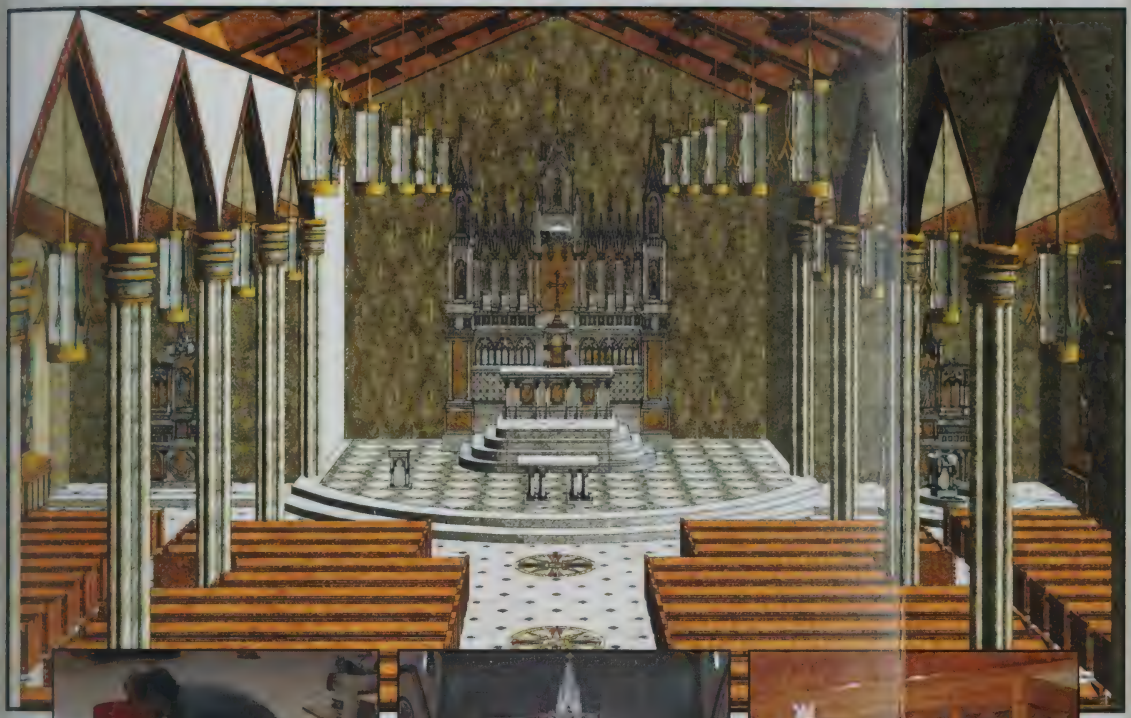
Such undertakings represent the social gospel in action, and they're part of how Pope Francis understands what it means to be a Church of the street rather than the sacristy.

Third, Francis is very much the "Pope of Mercy," convinced that mercy is the most important Christian message in this era.

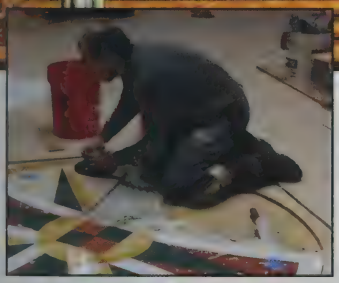
That commitment to mercy is expressed in his motto as a pope, which he carried with him from his time as the Archbishop of Buenos Aires. It's a line from the Venerable Bede on the gospel scene of the call of Matthew, which roughly translates as "choosing with the eyes of mercy." It's also expressed in the new pope's signature line, "The Lord never tires of forgiving."

Aboard the papal plane returning from Brazil to Rome, Francis said that he believes the present moment is a kairos for mercy, using an evocative Greek New Testament term that means a privileged moment in God's plan of salvation.

Watching Francis in action, it seems clear that everything he's doing, from the details of how to restructure the Vatican bank up to hard pastoral questions such as what to do about divorced and remarried Catholics, is premised on a desire that when the outside world looks at the Catholic Church, it will see a genuine community of mercy.



Francis is no naïf, so he knows that a minister of the Christian gospel is obliged to pronounce both God's judgment and God's mercy on a fallen world. One without the other would be a falsification. Yet his calculation seems to be that the world has heard the Church's judgment with clarity, so now is the moment for the world to hear – and to see, taste, and feel – its mercy. Summing up, in twelve short months Francis has revolutionized public perceptions of the Church, launched an ambitious set of internal reforms, rekindled the missionary fires of Roman Catholicism, and revived mercy as a core Christian virtue.



All told, not bad for a year's work. The question now is, what will he do for an encore?

Sanctity of St. John XXIII & St. John Paul II

For The Official Catholic Directory

BY EDWARD PENTIN

Both St. John XXIII and St. John Paul II were complex men, but that did little to prevent their evident personal holiness from winning hearts and minds to Christ.

Cardinal Angelo Comastri, archpriest of St. Peter's basilica, accurately summed up the chief characteristic of St. John XXIII that made him such a holy and revered figure in the post-conciliar Church. And it's a reflection that can be applied to both saints.

Speaking to an audience in Trieste in mid-March 2014, the Italian cardinal told a story of when Pope Paul VI asked a well-known Italian-American author, Giuseppe Prezzolini, for suggestions on how to bring people distant from the Church closer to her.

The official portrait of St. John XXIII, canonized by Pope Francis on April 27, 2014. The "Good Pope" is remembered by many for his warmth, simplicity, social conscience and sense of humor.

"Prepare good people," Prezzolini said, "persons with good hearts and mercy who able to love all people and to dialogue with everyone.

"Why?," he said. "Because good people attract, only good people attract."

Using this as his starting point, Cardinal Comastri paid tribute to the innate goodness and personal sanctity of Angelo Giuseppe Roncalli, who would later become "Good" Pope John XXIII and call the Second Vatican Council.

Noting that St. John left a "profound mark" on the Church, he recalled how, after his election, Roncalli read in the newspapers that he was considered a "transition" pope. "Why transition?", he asked. "Aren't we all people of transition? As long as the Lord wants, I'm here and will give it my all."

The cardinal spoke of St. John's "brave choice" to convene the Second Vatican Council which, he said, the former Pope "carried out with determination but also with an attitude of surrender" to the arms of Providence "which never sleeps."

He wanted the Council to find a suitable language to present to people today the beauty of the Gospel, Cardinal Comastri said. "And for this, he worked until the end, repeating until a few days before his death: I offer my life for the Church, the continuation of the Council, peace in the world, unity of Christians."

As well as their obvious innate goodness, the personal holiness of both popes, who were canonized on April 27th, can be characterised by common spiritual and human gifts: an exceptionally close and prayerful relationship with the Lord, a sensitivity to the promptings of the Holy Spirit, courage and a fearlessness in action, and a humanity to which everyone can relate.

"Throughout his whole life, Roncalli tried to become a saint," said the late pontiff's great-nephew, Marco Roncalli. "Year after year, he discovered what matters is the substance needed to become a saint," he told me. "It's not about mimicking other figures, but achieving a degree that is possible for him."

His great uncle, Roncalli recalled, once wrote: "Since everyone calls me Holy Father, as if this was my first title, well then I must and I want to be him for real." St. John, he believes, wanted what he calls a "public holiness", taking time "to help make clear to people the real value of life and what is conducive to their salvation."

St. John's former personal secretary, 98 year-old Cardinal Loris Capovilla, told Vatican Radio in September that when he first saw Archbishop Roncalli in a photograph taken in 1950, his first impression was that he had "seen a picture of goodness." If the "I" is not put under one's feet, he recalled the late Pope saying, "you'll never be free and never enter into the land of peace."

St. John put that approach into action when he called the Council, Cardinal Capovilla said, "with those sublime words: 'My person counts for nothing, a great lesson in humility, meekness, love and hope.'"

For the Vatican, and specifically the Congregation for the Causes of Saints, St. John XXIII's heroic virtues largely center on his decision to call the Second Vatican Council and all that followed.

At his beatification in 2000, Cardinal José Saraiva Martins, then-secretary of the congregation, praised John XXIII's promotion of ecumenism and that he was concerned about "fraternal relations with the Orthodox of the East", whom he knew for a long time as apostolic nuncio in Bulgaria and in Istanbul. He recalled his push towards "more intense relations with the Anglicans and the diverse world of the Protestant Churches" and said that "in every way, he set about to lay the foundations for a new attitude in the Catholic Church toward the Jewish world, decisively opening up the Church to dialogue and collaboration."

Speaking for himself, at a ceremony marking his inauguration as Patriarch of Venice in 1953, Angelo Roncalli assessed his character this way: "I am like every other man who lives here below," he said. "I am 71 years old; I have been endowed with the grace of good physical health, with a little good sense that enables me to look quickly and clearly into the heart of things, and with a disposition to love people that keeps me faithful to the injunctions of the gospel, respectful of my rights and those of others, and which prevents me from doing harm to anyone."

St. John XXIII leads the opening session of the Second Vatican Council in St. Peter's Basilica, Oct. 11, 1962.

And yet despite his simple holiness, he was not a simple man. "He has certainly been a complex figure, much more complex than the cliché of the 'good pope'," said Marco Roncalli. "His path in life was complex, rich and spiritual, like the example he gave through his Christian virtues, delineated in the history of mankind."

Roncalli said his great-uncle's complexity was also reflected throughout his life "because he was able to talk face to face with God in prayer but also to find Him in the work and affairs of mankind." That complexity, he added, "also derived from positive influences on him from important figures." He recalled his ten years spent as secretary to the respected bishop, Giacomo Maria Radini-Tedeschi, as well as the complex situations he experienced in Bulgaria, Turkey, Greece, and France.

But despite this, Roncalli said, "the complexity never undermined his genuine, authentic simplicity." He was "cloaked in humility," Roncalli added, evident in his autobiography, "Journal of a Soul", his spiritual notebook, in which he discusses his "words, gestures and actions that shine like stars in his life."

For Pope Francis, peace was the outward hallmark of St. John, but his inner constitution was made virtuous through obedience. "Obedience, in fact, was the instrument with which to achieve peace," Francis said last year on the 50th anniversary of the opening of the Second Vatican Council. "He accomplished it through long and challenging work on himself" as he pursued a path of "gradual purification of the heart."

For Marco Roncalli, enabling others to share in John XXIII's path of holiness is the main purpose of Pope Francis' decision to dispense with the need for a miracle and canonize his predecessor. The canonization is not meant to serve John XXIII, Roncalli said, "but is inviting us to follow 'a shining light for the journey ahead of us', to live with the goal of attainable holiness, also aware that if the virtues are human exercises, then the shaping of holiness, including that of Pope John, must be left to God."

St. John Paul II's personal sanctity is arguably better known, and most especially his deep love of prayer. Karol Wojtyla, or Lolek as he was fondly called in his youth, was remembered by his childhood friends for his piety and the unusually long time he would spend praying.

His famous devotion to the Blessed Virgin Mary began from his earliest days, and his absorption in prayer would grow over the years, both in duration and in intensity. Sometimes his entire body would express this intensity of abandonment. His university friend, Wojciech Zukrowski, once recalled how, when the Nazis were rounding up young men in Krakow to send to work camps, Karol hid in the basement, praying face down on the damp floor, arms outstretched, until the Nazis had left.

It was that intense prayer life that gave him such conviction and fearlessness as Pope, which most notably came into play in his battles against Soviet communism.

"His entire life manifested heroic virtue, which is the criterion for canonization," said his biographer, George Weigel. "He was an utterly Christ-centered man, who took all his serious decisions on his knees, before the Blessed Sacrament."

Furthermore, it was Wojtyla's love for the truth that gave him courage and a sense of personal liberty. "John Paul II never said that he possessed the truth," recounted one of Wojtyla's former students and close friends, Professor Stanislaw Grygiel, in March this year. "But he held on to the truth more than anything in order to reinforce the faith in others." Wojtyla would continually seek to be converted to the truth, Grygiel continued, "believing in the Gospel and seeking conversion, otherwise life is lost."

"This is holiness," he said. "Care for life, through continual conversion to the truth." It leads, he added, "not to hiding from anything because there is nothing to hide. A holy man is always transparent, because he is attached to the faith, to the truth, and nothing else."

From this came John Paul II's legendary fearlessness, and his famous motto "Be not afraid," Grygiel explained. "He didn't fear anyone or anything," he recalled, and he revealed how this courage was manifest from the earliest days of his pontificate, when there were early indications that his life was in danger.

"It was May 18th, 1979, and John Paul II had gone to Monte Cassino to celebrate Mass there," the Polish professor recalled. "During Mass, while I was on my knees, I saw in front of me (then-Italian Prime Minister) Giulio Andreotti, and noticed someone slipping him a small piece of paper. Afterwards, he told me that a secret policeman saw someone try to get close (to John Paul) armed with a weapon, I don't know what kind.

"That evening," Grygiel continued, "I had the opportunity to dine with the Holy Father, and afterwards I recounted what had happened. He looked at the ground and just said this: 'They are coming for me already'. Inside he knew he was already a target, but he didn't have any fear, and he emitted his courage to others."

Many have remarked on this highly-developed sense of calm and submission to God's will, especially during World War II. But often his holiness was visible not through his courage but his pastoral sensitivity. Grygiel recalled how a couple whom he would stay with in Rome had suffered a great tragedy: their first baby died in his mother's womb. After a year or two, a second baby was born with severe brain damage and died two or three days later.

"I told the Holy Father about this, because he'd asked me: how are you? Where do you live? And so I told him," Grygiel said. "And I suggested to him very discreetly that perhaps it would be good to invite them for the Mass, here, in the morning. 'Yes', he said. 'Come tomorrow'.

"We came to Mass, and then after the Mass the Holy Father invited us to breakfast," Grygiel recalled. "He spoke very discreetly about the issues of faith, of love, marriage, and so on. After breakfast, he got up, he took a large candle, like the paschal candle we find in Church. He gave the candle to the wife of my friend and then he embraced her and held her there, I don't know, perhaps two minutes, without a word. She was attached to him, and he completely enveloped this young woman in his arms…and then he said only: 'Yes, be at peace, from today on everything will be all right'. And then five children were born. The first two were baptized by John Paul and my wife and I were the godparents."

St. John Paul II greeting the crowd during World Youth Day in Poland in 1992.

Pope Emeritus Benedict XVI knew of St. John Paul II's reputation for holiness from when they attended the Second Vatican Council, but he didn't meet him until much later. "(The idea) that John Paul II was a saint came to me from time to time, in the years of my collaboration with him, ever clearer," he said in an interview in January this year.

"Naturally, one must first of all keep in mind his intense relationship with God, his being immersed in communion with the Lord, of which he hardly spoke," he said. "From here came his happiness in the midst of the great labors he had to sustain, and the courage with which he fulfilled his task at a truly difficult time."

The former pontiff recalled how John Paul never sought applause but "acted from his faith and his convictions and he was ready also to suffer the blows."

"The courage of the truth is in my (judgment) the criterion of the first order of sanctity," he said. "Only from his relation with God is it possible to understand his indefatigable pastoral commitment. He gave himself with a radicalism which cannot be explained otherwise."

As well as their obvious innate goodness, the personal holiness of both popes ... can be characterised by common spiritual and human gifts: an exceptionally close and prayerful relationship with the Lord, a sensitivity to the promptings of the Holy Spirit, courage and a fearlessness in action, and a humanity to which everyone can relate.

But he also remembered his "extraordinary" kindness and understanding. "Often I had sufficient reasons to blame myself or to put an end to my job of Prefect (of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith). And yet he supported me with absolutely incomprehensible fidelity and kindness," he said. Benedict remembered especially how supportive the Polish Pontiff was during the controversy that followed publication of the declaration Dominus Iesus in 2000.

Recalling John Paul's tireless commitment to serving the Lord, such as his many foreign apostolic trips, the Pope Emeritus remembered accompanying him on his first visit to Germany in 1980. "During his stay in Munich, I decided he should take a longer break at midday," he recalled. "During that interval he called me to his room. I found him reciting the Breviary and I said to him: "Holy Father, you should rest", and he said: "I can do so in Heaven."

"Only one who is profoundly filled with the urgency of his mission can act like this," he said.

It was on that trip that many Catholics caught their first glimpse of John Paul II's evident sanctity. Weigel explained the reaction John Paul elicited on that visit in his biography, Witness to Hope.

"This was not a man asserting himself in an authoritarian fashion," he wrote. "Even during the lengthy Masses, his was not the face of someone presiding over a great public ceremony. It was the face of a man lost in prayer, living in a dimension of experience beyond words.

"Whatever the Germans expected to see," Weigel wrote, "what they saw and were fascinated by was the face of a mystic."

19 New Cardinals:

Pope Francis Expands His Vision of a Church of Shepherds

BY BARB FRAZE

When Pope Francis named his first group of cardinals, he expanded his vision of a church full of "shepherds living with the smell of the sheep."

Four of the 19 men elevated to the College of Cardinals Feb. 22 were members of the Roman Curia. Almost all of the others had in common their work with the poor and service to ordinary people.

When people look at how Pope Francis changed the church, they could well point to his vision of a church of humble evangelists and men of prayer, willing to sacrifice everything for their flocks.

Italian cardinal-designate Gualtiero Bassetti of Perugia-Citta della Pieve claimed he had no advance notice that Pope Francis would name him a cardinal, and he did not believe the woman who ran into the sacristy after a confirmation Mass to tell him the news. When he looked on the Vatican website and saw it was true, "I almost fainted," he said.

Cardinal Bassetti was the first cardinal from Perugia named in 160 years; the last Perugia bishop to wear the red hat, Cardinal Gioacchino Pecci, became Pope Leo XIII in 1878. The fact that Pope Francis chose him and not the archbishops of the traditional cardinal sees of Venice and Turin was widely interpreted as evidence the pope was focusing on people rather than places in making his choice.

Pope Francis had spent months explaining his vision of bishops as pastors, and his descriptions carried over to his appointment of cardinals. He told new bishops that careerism was scandalous and "a cancer," and he urged them not to become "airport bishops" but to do as St. Peter said, and "Tend the flock of God in your midst." He told Vatican nuncios, who help him choose bishops, that the candidates should be "gentle, patient and merciful" and should "love poverty: interior poverty, as freedom for the Lord, and exterior poverty, as well as simplicity and a modest lifestyle."

On more than one occasion he said bishops "should not be princes," and he warned, "Be careful that they are not ambitious, that they are not in quest of the episcopate."

Cardinal Philippe Ouedraogo of Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, waves as he leaves St. Peter's Basilica after a consistory at which he was made a cardinal by Pope Francis at the Vatican Feb. 22.

The men he chose as cardinals also reflected the "great continental mission" put forth by the Fifth General Conference of the Bishops of Latin America and the Caribbean in Aparecida, Brazil, in 2007. Pope Francis, as Cardinal Jorge Mario Bergoglio, was head of the drafting commission for the final document, which addressed issues such as evangelization, ministry to the poor and disenfranchised, the seduction of the global marketplace, cultural changes and the environment.

Several of the men named referred to themselves as "simple" or "little."

Cardinal Philippe Ouedraogo of Ouagadougou, Burkina Faso, who said his Italian is not good, said he thought someone was playing a joke when he got the phone call about his appointment. "I asked the caller what the pope wanted from the little bishop of the savannah," Cardinal Ouedraogo told reporters. "I myself am just a little pastor from the Burkina savannah who tries to get the job done and do what I can. As St. Augustine said, this is a service of love, and I try my best to do it without ambition or pretension."

Yet the "little pastor" has been increasingly critical of the government and Burkina Faso's domination by "a handful of citizens who hold the great part of its wealth" in a society "characterized by disparities, inequality, injustice, poverty and misery."

Cardinal Ricardo Ezzati Andrello of Santiago, Chile, who served on the drafting commission with the pope in Aparecida, described himself as "the son of a simple family, a small business owner in a rural village. I always remember my origins, and I think this has helped me in much of my life." A spokesman for the Chilean bishops' conference said Cardinal Ezzati has dedicated his career to working alongside the people, much the way Pope Francis did when he was a bishop in neighboring Argentina. He added that the cardinal is a man who has "served the people, especially those who are marginalized and excluded."

People who know Cardinal Chibly Langlois of Les Cayes, Haiti, said he worked tirelessly after the January 2010 earthquake in his country and that he represents the face of new Haitian church dedicated to working with the country's most vulnerable residents. They also said he never forgot his impoverished childhood.

The elevation of Pope Francis' successor in Buenos Aires, Argentina, Cardinal Mario Poli, was seen as a continuation of the pope's work there. Cardinal Poli was an auxiliary under his predecessor, and both have a similar pastoral style, including spending time with the poor.

Nicaraguan church leaders said a simple, humble approach and a dedication to working beside the poor defined the work of Cardinal Leopoldo Brenes Solorzano of Managua, Nicaragua. Although as archbishop of the nation's capital, the cardinal has criticized the government, he said he did not think that was why he was elevated to cardinal. "For me, what's important is being close to the people, living in the parish. And I think that the Holy Father knows a little about my work here in the archdiocese and also in Central America," he said.

Several other new cardinals also have found themselves at odds with governmental authorities.

In 2011, during a civil war that left 3,000 citizens of Ivory Coast dead and more than 500,000 displaced, Cardinal Jean-Pierre Kutwa of Abidjan temporarily went into hiding. Since the war, he has urged Catholics to confront political corruption and remember the church was "called to share with the poor and oppressed of every kind."

"What I'd like to combat precisely is the verbal violence of politicians," he added after the announcement that he would be made a cardinal. "It isn't just the truth which matters, but the form in which it's proposed. If the truth isn't pronounced with good form, the person you speak it to will feel aggression and refuse what's offered."

During martial law in the Philippines in the 1970s, Cardinal Orlando Quevedo of Cotabato spoke out for the protection of human rights, "especially for the Moro people who have been persecuted," said Mohager Iqbal, chief peace negotiator of the largest Muslim rebel group, the Moro Islamic Liberation Front.

Father Louis Lougen, superior general of the Oblates of Mary Immaculate, the religious order to which Cardinal Quevedo belongs, said that by naming him a cardinal, "Pope Francis is giving a signal to all of us: It is the recognition of a very committed missionary, a priest and bishop who leads by serving others, whose main concern is the Gospel and the poor and who has worked tirelessly to promote friendship between Christians and Muslims, to support their struggle to live together in respect and peace."

Remarks Pope Francis made to the Congregation of Bishops a week after he elevated new cardinals seem particularly apt for South Korean Cardinal Andrew Yeom Soo-jung of Seoul. "The courage to die and the generosity to offer his life and to expend himself for the flock are inscribed in the 'DNA' of the bishop," Pope Francis said.

For Cardinal Yeom, such sacrifice is part of his family history as well as the history of Catholicism in his country. He is a direct descendant of Joseph Yeom Deok-sun, who was among the first Koreans to embrace Catholicism in the late 1700s. Another direct ancestor, Peter Yeom Seok-tae, died in 1850 during the anti-Catholic persecutions of the Joseon or Choson dynasty.

Visiting a shelter run by Caritas Seoul after Pope Francis announced he was making him a cardinal, Cardinal Yeom told the sick and the homeless: "From now on, I will be wearing scarlet garments. The blood-like color symbolizes martyrdom, my willingness to die for faith. I need your prayers. Your prayers are strong, because they are made under difficult circumstances."

"The courage to die and the generosity to offer his life and to expend himself for the flock are inscribed in the 'DNA' of the bishop," Pope Francis said.

Many of the new cardinals reflected Pope Francis' vision of outreach emphasized in Aparecida.

When Cardinal Orani Tempesta was named archbishop of Rio de Janeiro in 2009, he had instructions to bring back the flock, many of whom had strayed toward evangelical congregations. He is often seen visiting poor communities in Rio and going up the hillsides to slums to visit his people, even though several priests from the archdiocese have been threatened by drug lords.

Quebec Cardinal Gerald Lacroix spent 10 years -- from 1990 to 2000 -- as a missionary in Colombia. Archbishop Paul-Andre Durocher, president of the Canadian Conference of Catholic Bishops, said the new cardinal "is recognized throughout the country as an extraordinary leader who is an enthusiastic preacher, with an unmistakable missionary zeal that is accented by his complete dedication to the new evangelization. He is known as a man of sincerity and humility who possesses a welcoming spirit. Most of all, he brings the person of our Lord Jesus Christ to everyone, regardless of their age, sex, culture, faith or personal circumstances."

In 2012, Cardinal Vincent Nichols of Westminster, one of the archdioceses in London, ordered the perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament for the duration of the London Olympics as part of massive church efforts both to care for visitors and to evangelize. He also has been instrumental in the efforts of the bishops of England and Wales to implement child protection programs and address the clerical sexual abuse scandal.

German Cardinal Gerhard Muller, prefect of the Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith, is friends with Dominican Father Gustavo Gutierrez, considered the father of liberation theology. Cardinal Muller used to spend up to two months each year living with the poorest of the poor in Lima, Peru. The cardinal said that, living among the poor, he learned to "firmly reject the vision of the church as a religious entity totally separate from the world and self-sufficient."

"One must distinguish between an erroneous and a correct liberation theology," Cardinal Muller once told journalists. While a Catholic must reject Marxist ideas and analysis, he said, "we must ask ourselves sincerely: How can we speak about the love and mercy of God in the face of the suffering of so many people who do not have food, water, medical care; who don't know how to give their own children a future; where human dignity really is lacking; where human rights are ignored by the powerful?"

Italian Cardinal Beniamino Stella heads the Congregation for Clergy, the Vatican office responsible for the formation, ministry and life of priests and deacons. With 20 years as a papal nuncio and six years as head of the academy that trains Vatican diplomats, he has experience working in developing nations and handling highly-charged situations of conflict, including in places like Colombia and Cuba.

Another new cardinal with years of experience around the world is Italian Cardinal Lorenzo Baldisseri, general secretary of the Synod of Bishops. He has served the Vatican for 40 years -- mostly as a Vatican diplomat and heading the nunciatures in Brazil, Nepal and India, Paraguay and Haiti. He also served in Guatemala, Japan, France and Zimbabwe. He also has been involved in some of Pope Francis' key preparatory meetings and discussions on the reform of the Roman Curia.

Pope Francis' secretary of state -- the top Vatican diplomat and coordinator of the Roman Curia -- also was made a cardinal. Cardinal Pietro Parolin has said he hopes to imitate the joy and the simplicity with which Pope Francis has carried out his ministry. Before being named secretary of state in 2013, he was nuncio to Venezuela, and he told a prominent daily there that the Vatican's success in international diplomacy has been due to the fact that Vatican diplomatic efforts are not tied to national interests, but to "the well-being of all humanity." Until his appointment as nuncio to Venezuela in 2009, the cardinal-designate worked in the Vatican Secretariat of State. For several years, he led Vatican delegations to Vietnam to discuss church-state issues with the country's communist government, a process that eventually led Vietnam to accept a nonresident papal representative to the country. The move was widely seen as a step toward establishing full diplomatic relations. He also represented the Vatican at a variety of international conferences, including meetings on climate change, on human trafficking and on the Israeli-Palestinian conflict. He led the Vatican delegation to the 2007 Middle East peace conference in Annapolis, Md.

Three of the 19 elevated to cardinal joined the ranks of cardinals over age 80, who are too old to vote in a conclave for a pope but who remain advisers to the pope as members of the College of Cardinals.

One of them, Cardinal Kelvin Felix, who led the Archdiocese of Castries, St. Lucia, for nearly 30 years, was the first cardinal to be named from the Antilles bishops' conference, based in Trinidad and Tobago. Many who know him refer to him as "Father Felix." While he was working on a committee to advise the Vatican on English liturgical translations, he also helped introduce Creole into the Mass to help Catholics in St. Lucia strengthen their participation in the liturgy.

Spanish Cardinal Fernando Sebastian Aguilar, retired archbishop of Pamplona, is an outspoken leader who played an important role in developing the positions of the Spanish church over a career that has spanned six decades. His career has been marked by a deep dedication to theology that includes the publication of several letters and books on topics as diverse as stem-cell research to the importance of evangelization to how Christianity can confront terrorism.

The appointment of Italian Cardinal Loris Capovilla, who was 98 when he was named and became the world's oldest cardinal, was seen as a tribute to his service as secretary to and keeper of the legacy of Pope John XXIII. A journalist before starting to work for Pope John, he remains an energetic and eloquent raconteur, drawing on his remarkable memory for vividly-detailed and revealing stories of his years with one of the most consequential figures in modern Catholic history. He has also recounted those stories in numerous writings, including a memoir published in English as "The Heart and Mind of John XXIII."

In the past, analysts have often looked at the geographic distribution of cardinal appointments to try to gauge their impact. For instance, Pope John Paul II was known for internationalizing the Roman Curia, many of whom are cardinals.

When people look at how Pope Francis changed the church, they could well point to his vision of a church of humble evangelists and men of prayer, willing to sacrifice everything for their flocks. The men he chooses as cardinals are those who will be his advisers on reform of the Roman Curia and Vatican Bank, as well as those who are seen as leaders within their countries. In his first year as pope, for all the councils and commissions he named to help him implement reforms and increase transparency of church governance, he went outside the usual circle of cardinals and bishops with experience in the Roman Curia and appointed primarily pastors of local churches. Perhaps even more important is that cardinals elect popes, and, as Pope Francis makes appointments, the number of cardinals who value simplicity and the poor will continue to grow, affecting the outcome of future conclaves.

New Media, New Evangelization:

Catholics and the Online Mission Field

BY BRANDON VOGT

Father Robert Barron, a media savvy priest in the Archdiocese of Chicago, recently received an email from a twenty-year old atheist. The young man explained that after being raised in an anti-religious home, he detested God, religion, Catholicism, and, most of all, Catholic priests. For in his mind, all priests were ruthless authoritarians who preyed on young children.

However, the young man was a fan of Bob Dylan. One day, while he was searching for Bob Dylan music videos online, he stumbled across a video that Fr. Barron had uploaded to YouTube, the world's most popular video website. In the video Fr. Barron commented on the biblical undertones of Dylan's lyrics.

As soon as the young atheist saw Fr. Barron's priestly collar, he balked. He wanted to exit the video immediately. He wondered, "What could a priest possibly have to say about Bob Dylan?!" But something compelled him to watch. He viewed the short commentary and found Fr. Barron's insights to be thoughtful and intriguing. Then, as YouTube always does, the service recommended more videos based on the one he just finished. Those recommendations led him to some of Fr. Barron's other videos on books, movies, and popular culture. And those videos led to others focusing on more religious questions, like "How do we know God exists?" and "Who is Jesus?" Eventually, the young atheist found his way to Fr. Barron's website, WordOnFire.org, where over the following months he absorbed Fr. Barron's articles, audio clips, and blog posts.

All that finally led to his current email. He was writing to tell Fr. Barron that not only had the priest's online work convinced him that God exists, but that Jesus Christ was God and founded the Catholic Church. That conviction led the former-atheist to sign up for R.C.I.A., the process by which converts enter the Catholic Church.

Now, Fr. Barron would be the first to admit that this result is fairly unusual—YouTube videos about Bob Dylan don't often produce conversions to Catholicism. But the episode nevertheless highlights the tremendous potential the new media offers for evangelization.

Multiple popes have echoed this fact over the years. Pope John Paul II became the first pope to use a computer, and in the very last document he wrote before his death, The Rapid Development, he prophetically encouraged, "Do not be afraid of new technologies!" He understood that the new millennium required new tools for proclaiming the Gospel to the world, tools like the Internet, blogs, podcasts, and social media.

In December 2012, Pope Benedict XVI followed his predecessor's lead by launching the first ever papal tweet (using the papal iPad.) His first message, which took Twitter by storm, read: "Dear friends, I am pleased to get in touch with you through Twitter. Thank you for your generous response. I bless all of you from my heart." It was immediately re-tweeted (i.e., shared) thousands of times within the first few hours. Pope Benedict then used Twitter to answer questions from around the world, questions marked with the Twitter hashtag #AskPontifex.

When Pope Francis inherited the Chair of Peter, and along with it the papal Twitter account (@Pontifex), he took another giant leap forward on the digital continent. Pope Francis quickly became the most influential world leader through social media. In 2013, Facebook users mentioned his name more times than anyone else—more than President Obama and more than any celebrity or entertainer. Twitter users re-tweeted his messages more times, on average, than those of any other figure.

These recent popes have led by example in the digital realm. However, they've also encouraged other new media evangelists through a growing body of statements and encyclicals.

Give the Internet a Soul

The annual World Communications Day, established by the Second Vatican Council and held every year since, invites Catholics around the world to reflect on the importance and efficacy of social communications. On each celebration the pope releases a short meditation on a communications topic of his choice, typically a page or two long. Recent popes have focused heavily on the Internet.

In 2012, Pope Benedict's message observed that, "Search engines and social networks have become the starting point of communication for many people who are seeking advice, ideas, information and answers. In our time, the Internet is becoming ever more a forum for questions and answers." It's important for Catholics to affirm those questions, "and to open up the possibility of a profound dialogue, by means of words and interchange."

A year later, Pope Benedict followed with a message titled "Social Networks: Portals of Truth and Faith: New Spaces for Evangelization." There he invited "all who are conscious of the value of dialogue [and] reasoned debate" to venture online, for the digital world is increasingly populated by people in need of evangelizing. "Unless the Good News is made known also in the digital world," the pope explained, "it may be absent in the experience of many people for whom this existential space is important."

Most recently, in 2014, Pope Francis wrote that, "It is not enough to be passersby on the digital highways, simply 'connected'; connections need to grow into true encounters." By means of the internet, he added, "the Christian message can reach 'to the ends of the earth' (Acts 1:8). Keeping the doors of our churches open also means keeping them open in the digital environment so that people, whatever their situation in life, can enter, and so that the Gospel can go out to reach everyone."

Although the Internet can often seem like a hodgepodge of disparate sites and harmful content—anything but congruent with the Gospel—a select group of Catholics have harnessed these tools in line with the popes' summons. Their example provides a roadmap for evangelizing online.

PopeAlarm.com

Whether Catholic or atheist, friend or foe, almost everybody is interested in the pope. That was reaffirmed in March 2013 when the world's attention turned to a small chimney stack poking out of the Sistine Chapel. Millions of eyes locked in, in person or through airwaves, eager to glimpse the first wisp of white smoke.

Kevin Cotter was one of them. The, Director of Curriculum and Web for the Fellowship of Catholic University Students anticipated the event, but he also saw it as an evangelistic opportunity. Kevin understood how this conclave dominated the Google searches and Twitter feeds. He also knew that although most people were interested, they could not afford to glue themselves for hours to a TV, or a computer, waiting for the sign.

So he created a new website, PopeAlarm.com, to serve as a papal alert system. The idea was simple. Anyone could sign up for free alerts. Whenever the new pope was elected, Kevin would blast out a notification (either email or text message) to over 130,000 subscribers. This group would know about the new pontiff within seconds of it being revealed.

But that wasn't all. While alerting subscribers about the pope was the core intention of the tool, during the conclave and over the ensuing months, Kevin provided sporadic emails containing facts and insights about the papacy along with links to helpful books and resources. In time, his email list grew to become one of the world's most far-reaching vehicles for evangelization, introducing thousands of people to the Church and her teachings.

Other Catholic leaders are increasingly using new media to appropriate major cultural events to evangelize. Whether it's a pastor using Facebook to reach nearby inactive Catholics on Christmas or Ash Wednesday—the dates when Catholic-related search activity is near its highest—or the keen blogger who taps into the surging fascination with Pope Francis, the Internet allows Catholics to find cultural touchstones, places where the secular and sacred meet, and then to use those as bridges to evangelization.

CatholicMemes.com

When Ryan Scheel surveyed the online landscape a few years ago, he concluded that one form of content stood above all others in terms of popularity and shareabilitiy: memes. Typically a picture or graphic containing humorous text, memes are shared hundreds of thousands of times each day through sites like Facebook, Twitter, and Pinterest.

Seeing the potential, Ryan created a site called CatholicMemes.com, along with a corresponding Facebook page that boasts over 120,000 followers. Everyday he shares funny pictures that have become some of the most effective yet subtle forms of evangelization. For instance, one meme features a small dog sitting on carpet, with torn book pages scattered around him (see image on left). The captioned verse reads: "When I discovered your words, I devoured them."

Now, most people, familiar with memes, would know that that graphic is supposed to be a joke. But to get the joke, you have to understand the text. Therefore thousands of people, upon witnessing this meme, would naturally turn to the Bible—either online or in print, flipping to the middle of Jeremiah—all to get a joke. It would be a safe bet that when most of them woke up that morning, they had no idea they'd be reading from an Old Testament prophet.

Another popular meme features a group of Capuchin monks posing with long, illustrious beards. It says: "No shave November? Capuchins not impressed." Now, most viewers would be familiar with "No shave November," a tradition where men grow out their winter beards for a month. But fewer would recognize the word "Capuchins." To get the joke, they would have to turn to a search engine, like Google, and look up the term. That would lead them to a Wikipedia article on the Capuchins or, perhaps, maybe even to the order's webpage.

While it's true these funny memes are unable to present the full depth of the Gospel, and they're unlikely to bring a committed atheist to faith by themselves, they creatively move people from the secular to the sacred. By sharing these graphics on their own blogs or social media pages, any Catholic can participate in the "new expressions" and "new methods" Pope John Paul II routinely called for.

Fr. Robert Barron's YouTube Videos

Fr. Robert Barron receives regular emails from his followers. In addition to the message from the young atheist, he once received an email from a lady who was far away from the Church. But, as with the atheist, she found a circuitous path to God online. It began while reading articles about Charlie Sheen—this took place during Sheen's very public meltdown. The articles about Charlie Sheen led her to articles on his father, Martin Sheen, which then led her to articles on Archbishop Fulton Sheen, the great twentieth century evangelist (Martin Sheen took his stage name from the archbishop.) The Archbishop Sheen articles finally led her to Fr. Barron, whom many compare with Sheen. While absorbing Fr. Barron's articles and videos, the lady rediscovered her faith. Fr. Barron later remarked: "Lord, if you can use Charlie Sheen to lead people to faith, so be it!"

Once again, this anecdote highlights the far-reaching power of new media to connect with those the Church has long had difficulty reaching. Perhaps the most distant group from the Church is young, secularized men. Most baptized Catholics who leave the Church do so before age 30, and this group disproportionately includes men. Yet it's this precise demographic—18-35 year old men—that Fr. Barron's own YouTube video commentaries most often reach. By April 2014, these videos amassed over eight million views, a large number of them coming from young people who would never darken the doors of a church.

What explains this evangelistic success? It's partly because Fr. Barron engages the culture, often commenting on new books, movies, or current events from a Catholic perspective. Secularized young people interested in movies like The Dark Knight Rises or, as noted earlier, the music of Bob Dylan, find a fresh and relevant perspective through his work. He unearths within the secular world what the Church fathers called the "seeds of the word" so as to water those places where faith has already taken root.

Fr. Barron's videos also demonstrate the power of new media to evangelize viewers in their own homes, at their preferred times, and on their own terms. Instead of waiting for potential converts to show up to our institutions at specific days and times, the Church can reach them 24/7, anywhere in the world through new media.

StrangeNotions.com

One of the Bible's key evangelistic events takes place in Acts 17, which describes St. Paul's journey to Athens, Greece, the intellectual hub of the ancient world. There he met a group of pagan philosophers who invited him to the Areopagus (Mars Hill), to present his strange, startling message of Jesus risen from the dead. During his talk, Paul framed his message in culturally relevant terms. He referenced their poets and philosophers, and he complimented their religiosity. This intrigued some of his interlocutors, who said, "You bring some strange notions to our ears, and we should like to hear more." St. Paul left his visit to Athens with three important converts who would later become the seeds of European Christianity.

That meeting offers a model for Catholic evangelists today. It also sparked a new movement in May 2013, when over thirty Catholic theologians, philosophers, scientists, and artists joined together to launch StrangeNotions.com, a central place of dialogue between Catholics and atheists. Designed to mimic that first Areopagus meeting, from which the website gets its name, Strange Notions features high-minded articles and charitable dialogue about the big questions of life. The site has welcomed over 400,000 atheists and Catholics since its inception and over 45,000 comments. That makes it the largest concerted outreach to atheists in the history of the Church.

But the effort wouldn't have been nearly as successful without new media. Depending heavily on blog posts, videos, and comment boxes, the site allows non-believers to explore the topics privately, without being ostracized by anti-religious family or friends. It also invites discussion, with commenting and questioning being some of its main features.

All of that has made Strange Notions a go-to reference for worried mothers and fathers, wondering how to connect with their non-believing children, or parish leaders wanting to share helpful resources with their flock.

The Future of Online Evangelization

These examples show how Catholics have taken several major steps toward evangelizing the digital continent. But more effort is needed. For example, a 2012 CARA study revealed that just five percent of Catholics read or follow blogs on the Church, faith, or spirituality. Surprisingly, more than half of American Catholics are unaware that the Church has any significant online presence.

What's needed is for all Catholics to join in this work, to claim their missionary identity and see their own Facebook profiles, Twitter accounts, and text messages as evangelical vehicles. Online evangelization, grounded as it is on dialogue and personal relationships, is most effective when carried out by networks of individuals, each passionate about sharing their faith within their circles of influence. Every online Catholic is a missionary, and every social network a mission field.

Besides the fact that most Catholics are unfamiliar with online evangelistic content, another roadblock is that most of this content is designed for other Catholics. Liturgical blogs highlight beautiful and proper liturgies, Catholic homeschooling websites connect stay-at-home moms with each other, and news sites bring the latest information about the Pope and the Vatican to millions of Catholics. Those are all good and necessary, but the problem is that few Catholics use new media to target those not currently in the pews—inactive Catholics, the spiritual-but-not-religious crowd, atheists, and agnostics. To be successful, the next wave of Catholic new media must move past the ad intra issues of the Church and, in line with the New Evangelization, aim outward toward those on the margins, those disconnected and disenchanted by faith.

Shortly before launching his Twitter account, Pope Benedict noted: "Without fear we must sail on the digital sea" in order to "give a soul to the Internet's incessant flow of communication." Just as St. Paul evangelized Corinth, and St. Francis Xavier Asia, and Archbishop Fulton Sheen the modern airwaves, so the Church needs new evangelists today to venture forth online as ardent missionaries of Christ.

A Tale of Two Churches

Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA)

BY MARK M. GRAY, PH.D.

The self-identified Catholic population in the United States, as measured in national polls, grew by 5.5 million (+8 percent) between 2000 and 2013. Yet this growth has not been "visible" to all. For some it may seem like just a mirage. Why? Underneath the national statistics there are two stories emerging. The health of the Church is somewhat relative and this relativity is based in geography. For those residing in the South or West the narrative of a growing, thriving Church likely fits what one sees in the pews in their local parish. Yet if one is living in the Northeast or Midwest the Church must seem like an institution fading and in decline.

As shown in Figure 1 (see next page), the total number of parishes nationally has been declining since 1989. There are 2,048 fewer parishes in the United States now than there were in 1989. The Catholic population that is active in parish life, the "parish-connected," as measured in totals reported by dioceses in The Official Catholic Directory, has also grown during this period and with it so has the number of Catholics per parish. In 1989, there were 2,805 active Catholics per parish. By 2012 this had risen to 3,799 per parish (an increase of 35%).

"There are 2,048 fewer parishes in the United States now than there were in 1989. Meanwhile the number of Catholics active in parish life has grown 35% during the same period."

The growth in the parish-connected Catholic population has been uneven, with dioceses in the South and West seeing strong growth since 1990 (+63 percent and +67 percent, respectively). The numbers of Catholics in the Northeast (+2 percent) has fallen behind total population growth and declined in the Midwest (-2 percent) during this same period (see Figure 2 on next page). Despite all of this population growth nationally, the Church is building few new parishes. Construction is at its slowest pace since the early 19th century. The number of parishes in the Northeast (-21 percent), Midwest (-11 percent), and even the West (-5 percent) have declined since 1990. Only in the South has the number of Catholic parishes grown (+3 percent). The lack of more robust construction of parishes in the South and West is giving rise to new Catholic mega-parishes. Some dioceses in southern California, Nevada, and Texas have 15,000 or more Catholics per parish. In contrast, some dioceses in Kansas, Minnesota, North Dakota, Ohio, and Michigan now have fewer than 700 Catholics per parish.

Changes in the regional distribution of Catholics began after the end of the Second World War. Urban enclaves that used to be home to Italians, Irish, and Polish Catholics began to lose population as soldiers coming back from the war went off to college and moved to the suburbs after marrying and starting families. The economic structure of the nation had an impact as well. As manufacturing in the Midwest and Northeast began fading into the Rust Belt, Catholics, like many other Americans, began to look South and West to the Sun Belt for jobs and new opportunities. Both migration and immigration have been important with more recent Catholic immigrants, many from Latin America and Asia, more often settling in the South and West as well. In 1950, 46 percent of Catholics lived in the Northeast and 30 percent resided in the Midwest. These regions are now home to 29 percent and 21 percent of the Catholic population, respectively. More than half of the Catholic population now lives in the South and West when only a quarter did so in 1950.

As Catholics left the dense population centers of pre-World War II Catholic America, the brick and mortar of their parishes could not follow them. The Church was also slow in closing parishes in the urban Northeast and Midwest and only painfully started about this process on a large scale in the 1990s. This continues today and remains difficult for all involved. More closings are likely in the Church's future in these regions. Figure 3 (see next page) shows rankings for the U.S. counties with the highest numbers of parishes. Alongside are the matching rankings for the size of the Catholic "adherent" population (i.e., individuals known to a parish) in each of these counties. Cook County Illinois (including Chicago) and Los Angeles California are at the top of the parish and population list. Below these are counties including Pittsburgh, Detroit, Worcester, Philadelphia, and New York which rank high in the number of parishes but lower in parish-connected Catholic population.

The Center for Applied Research in the Apostolate (CARA) recently conducted a national survey of parishes to delve deeper into the two tales emerging in the Church in the United States. Analyses of these new data give us a new clear view of what is happening in the pews. As shown in Figure 4 (see next page), the average growth or decline in registered parishioners and weekly Mass attenders per parish varies by region. Catholics in a typical parish in the West have likely seen significant growth in the number of registered parishioners (+394) and Mass attenders (+93) since 2008. To a slightly lesser extent, this is likely what someone is seeing in a typical parish in the South (+147 registered and +25 attending). In the West and South where reports of a growing Church, as reflected in national statistics, likely match what people "feel" on a day-to-day basis.

By contrast, those in the Northeast may find reports of growth in the Church unbelievable based on their own personal experience.

In this region, a typical parish has lost 167 registered parishioners and 22 Mass attenders since 2008. Parishes in the Midwest are also likely seeing fewer in the pews on Sunday (14 fewer attenders) but are not experiencing the same losses, on average, in registered parishioners (+33) as Northeastern parishes.

Migration and immigration are only part of the emerging portraits of "two Churches" in the United States. Age is also a factor. On average, parishes nationally have about 3,000 parishioners (about 2,600 registered individuals and 400 other unregistered individual Mass attenders). Figure 5 (see next page) shows regional differences in the total sizes of parishes. It also breaks down the number and percentage of parishioners in each age group. A third of parishioners in the parishes in the Northeast are age 65 or older. Just 19 percent are under 18. Without other changes, simple generational replacement will slowly draw down the numbers of Catholics in parishes in the Northeast. The Midwest has a more balanced distribution across age cohorts and are less likely to suffer the same generational losses over time. Parishes in the South and West are larger than those in the Midwest but will likely be affected by aging populations in the near future. A majority, six in ten parishioners, in these regions are ages 40 and older.

Another measure of generational change is to compare the number of infant and child baptisms to the number of funerals in a given year. As shown in Figure 6 (see next page), in all regions the average number of baptisms per parish is larger than the average number of funerals per parish. However, there are more than twice as many infant or child baptisms than funerals in parishes in the West. Baptisms nearly double the number of funerals in parishes in the South as well. In the Midwest and Northeast the annual number of infant and child baptisms is just slightly higher than the number of funerals, on average. One other interesting observation is that in each region the number of First Communions is greater than the number of infant or child baptisms. This is an echo of the Great Recession and falling birthrates. Fewer children means fewer baptisms. We can expect a ripple effect of this decline to affect the number of First Communions in the next few years.

One final component of the "two Churches" emerging in the United States is cultural diversity. In the late 1970s national surveys indicated nearly one in ten Catholics self-identified their race and ethnicity as Hispanic or Latino. In CARA Catholic Polls (CCP) and other national surveys today about 36 percent of Catholics self-identify as Hispanic or Latino. CARA parish surveys also estimate that 40 percent of all growth in registered parishioners in U.S. parishes from 2005 to 2010 was among Hispanic/Latinos.

As shown in Figure 7 below, more than eight in ten parishioners in parishes in the Northeast and the Midwest are non-Hispanic white. By comparison only 64 percent of parishioners in the South and 43 percent of those in the West are non-Hispanic white. Immigration and higher birthrates among Hispanic and Asian Catholic immigrants have increased the Church's numbers in the South and West and brought greater cultural diversity into the pews. Catholicism is now the most racially and ethnically diverse religion in the United States—even more diverse than the growing population of Americans without a religious affiliation.

In CARA's most recent national parish survey, 32 percent of parishes indicated that they celebrate Mass in a language other than English at least once a month. This is up from 22 percent of parishes reporting this to CARA in 2000. A majority of parishes in the West (52 percent) and in 44 percent of parishes in the South celebrate Masses in a language other than English. By comparison only 27 percent of parishes in the Northeast and 16 percent of parishes in the Midwest do this. Spanish language Masses are most common with nearly one in four parishes in the United States (23 percent) celebrating Mass in Spanish at least once a month. CARA estimates that overall, about 6 percent of all Masses (weekend and weekday) in the United States are celebrated in Spanish.

In addition to Masses, 37 percent of parishes report that they have special observances, such as a feast day celebration, specific devotion, or other celebrations for a particular ethnic or cultural group in the parish. The most common specific celebrations noted are for Our Lady of Guadalupe. A total of 21 percent of all U.S. Catholic parishes have some celebration for this on December 12.

CARA has identified a total of 6,332 parishes in the United States that are known to serve a particular racial, ethnic, cultural, and/or linguistic community (36 percent of all U.S. parishes). Some of these parishes serve two or three of these communities. The largest number of these parishes, a total of 4,544, serve a Hispanic or Latino Catholic community. These parishes are shown in the map above overlaid by the estimated size of the Hispanic or Latino Catholic population in each county.

Significant growth in the Hispanic or Latino Catholic community is excepted to continue. Other sub-groups in the Catholic population are expected to continue to grow as well, just at slower rates. Thus, the percentage of Catholics self-identifying as Hispanic or Latino is expected to increase above 40 percent in the next ten years. By 2050, CARA estimates the self-identified Catholic population in the United States will exceed 100 million. If the Church was to reverse its declining numbers of parishes and simply hold steady at its current total this will result in nearly 5,800 Catholics per parish. However, significant changes are needed as much of the Church's population growth is expected to occur in the South and West, which continue to be underdeveloped in terms of brick and mortar. The oversupply of parishes in the Northeast and Midwest can't be simply shifted South. New construction will need to quicken and within these new parishes the Church will greet an even more diverse population by mid-century with many different languages and with an abundance of new cultural traditions and celebrations.

"More than eight in ten parishioners in parishes in the Northeast and the Midwest are non-Hispanic white. By comparison only 64 percent of parishioners in the South and 43 percent of those in the West are non-Hispanic white."

In the Northeast and Midwest a grimmer story is likely to continue to unfold. Archdioceses that have become accustomed to being led by a cardinal may see this tradition fade as Archdioceses in the West and South become more populated by Catholics. One of the two stories emerging in the Church may not get such a "happily ever after" ending.

Notes: Primary data sources for this article include The Official Catholic Directory (various years), the 2010 U.S. Religion Census: Religious Congregations and Membership Study, and CARA's 2013 National Survey of Catholic Parishes (NSCP).The latter began in fall 2013 as CARA sent the survey, including 169 questions to be answered by the pastor or delegated to another minister in the parish, to a random sample of 5,446 parishes. As of February 2014, CARA had received a total of 539 responses. This sample size results in a margin of sampling error of ±4.2 percentage points. Respondents match closely to the regional distribution of all parishes listed in The Official Catholic Directory. The NSCP was made possible through funding provided by SC Ministry Foundation and St. Matthew's Catholic Church in Charlotte, NC. Census regions include the following groupings of states. The Northeast region includes Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island, Vermont, New Jersey, New York, and Pennsylvania. The Midwest region includes Illinois, Indiana, Michigan, Ohio, Wisconsin, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Nebraska, North Dakota, and South Dakota. The South region includes Delaware, the District of Columbia, Florida, Georgia, Maryland, North Carolina, South Carolina, Virginia, West Virginia, Alabama, Kentucky, Mississippi, Tennessee, Arkansas, Louisiana, Oklahoma, and Texas. The West region includes Arizona, Colorado, Idaho, Montana, Nevada, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Alaska, California, Hawaii, Oregon, and Washington.

2013 Year in Review

Washington and Rome

BY JOSHUA J. McELWEE

Without a doubt, 2013 will be remembered by many Catholics as the year of two incredible events: the resignation of Pope Benedict XVI and the election of Pope Francis.

The images of both were stark and are easy to draw to mind: Benedict leaving the Vatican via helicopter for the last time as the reigning pontiff; Francis emerging from the conclave on the balcony of St. Peter's Basilica and asking in a quiet voice for the crowds below to pray for him as he began his petrine ministry.

Yet, beyond the imagery at the Vatican there were also many key themes at work in the U.S. church, which was adjusting to Francis' new focuses while also dealing with holdovers from previous years like the debate over healthcare reform and the treatment of the country's women religious.

Synod preparations and a focus on dialogue

Questions on the role of dialogue in Catholic life were a key theme of the year, touched off particularly in October by a letter from the Vatican office preparing for a global meeting of the world's bishops in 2014.

The letter -- sent from then-Archbishop Lorenzo Baldisseri, secretary general of the Vatican's Synod of Bishops, to individual bishops and bishops' conferences around the world -- asked each bishop to consult "as widely as possible" in their preparations for the Oct. 5-19, 2014 meeting, called by Francis on the theme "Pastoral Challenges of the family in the context of evangelization."

Along with his letter, Baldisseri sent a questionnaire for the bishops to distribute. The questionnaire, spanning four pages, asked for "input from local sources" on sometimes-controversial issues like contraception, same-sex marriage and divorce and remarriage.

While the U.S. bishops' conference left it up to individual bishops to decide how to use the questionnaire, other bishops' conferences around the world operated differently. The Catholic Bishops Conference of England and Wales, for example, set up an online survey system for Catholics to respond to the Vatican questions. Some 16,500 people responded to the British effort.

The effort to seek dialogue with lay Catholics, said one key cardinal in December, is part of Francis' process in leading the church.

Speaking at a Vatican book launch on Dec. 4, Honduran Cardinal Óscar Rodríguez Maradiaga said the pope has a constant "volcanic flow of ideas" and "loves to open doors and windows and be in dialogue."

Baldisseri emphasized the point of the synod questionnaire in a December interview with the National Catholic Reporter, saying he had meant to ask the world's bishops to gather information from the "grass roots" of the faithful.

The consultation cannot be limited only to the bishops' advisers, said Baldisseri, but "must gather information from the grass roots and not limit itself to the level of the Curia or other institutions."

"Though involved in the process, they must cooperate by addressing themselves to the faithful, to communities, to associations and other bodies," he said.

Stressing the role of dialogue and consultation at the level of the universal church, Francis in April appointed eight cardinals from around the world to advise him in reforming the Vatican's central bureaucracy and in his leadership of the global church.

That group, known formally as the Council of Cardinals, is being led by Rodríguez Maradiaga and met in at the Vatican for the first times in October and December. Boston Cardinal Seán O'Malley is the only U.S. bishop in the group, which is expected to continue its work for an indefinite period.

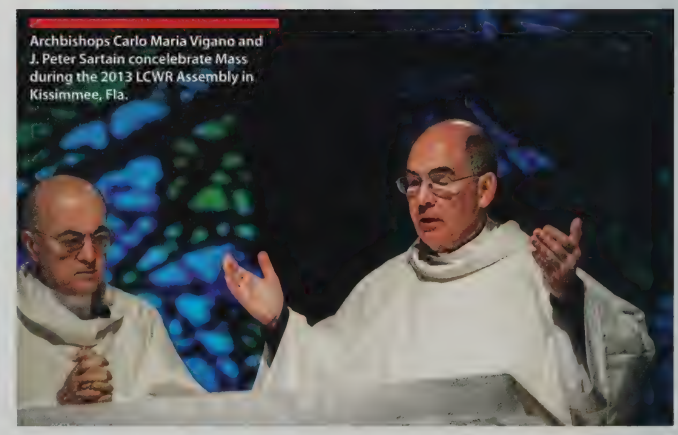
O'Malley announced the first major initiative of the Council during a press briefing at the Vatican Dec. 5, saying Francis had decided to go forward with their idea to form a new pontifical commission tasked with advising the pontiff on safeguarding children from clergy sexual abuse and working pastorally with abuse victims.

Questions on the role of sisters, laywomen

Although the Vatican's investigation of the main representative group of U.S. women religious, the Leadership Conference of Women Religious, was not in the spotlight as it was in 2012, questions continued to percolate about the group's status.

In a significant shift from previous years, the wider role of women in the church was also the topic of discussion at the Vatican, where Francis said repeatedly he was hoping to involve women in more decision-making positions.

A Maryland-based umbrella group that claims to represent about 80 percent of the some 57,000 U.S. sisters, LCWR was the subject of a "doctrinal assessment" from the Vatican's Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith in 2012. The assessment appointed Seattle Archbishop J. Peter Sartain as the group's apostolic delegate, giving him a five-year mandate with wide authority to oversee the group's functioning.



Sartain addressed his role for the first time with the full LCWR membership during the group's annual meeting in August, speaking in a closed-door session with the some 825 sisters at the assembly. While the LCWR members were asked not to speak about the event, several said in NCR interviews afterward that they left unsure of what Sartain's role would be with their group going forward and were still unclear about why he had been appointed.

"The session with Archbishop Sartain allowed a profound and honest sharing of views," LCWR said in a press release following the meeting. "Although we remain uncertain as to how our work with the bishop delegates will proceed, we maintain hope that continued conversations of this depth will lead to a resolution of this situation that maintains the integrity of LCWR and is healthy for the whole church."

Handling of the LCWR issue had come up at the Vatican in May, during the triennial assembly of the International Union of Superiors General, a representative body of sisters around the world.

Speaking to that meeting was Brazilian Cardinal João Braz de Aviz, the prefect of the Vatican congregation responsible for religious life, known formally as Congregation for

In a significant shift from previous years, the wider role of women in the church was also the topic of discussion at the Vatican, "We have to work harder to develop a profound theology of the woman," said (Pope)Francis.

Institutes of Consecrated Life and Societies of Apostolic Life.

He said that his office -- which is tasked with overseeing the work an estimated 1.5 million sisters, brothers, and priests around the world in religious orders -- first learned of the move against the U.S. sisters' group in a meeting with the Vatican's doctrinal congregation after the formal report on the matter had been completed.

At that meeting, Braz de Aviz said, he told Cardinal William Levada, an American who has since retired as head of the doctrinal office, that the matter should have been discussed between the Vatican offices.

"We will obey what the Holy Father wants and what will be decided through you," Braz de Aviz told the sisters he had said to Levada. "But we must say that this material which should be discussed together has not been discussed together."

"I obeyed," Braz de Aviz continued telling the sisters. "But I had so much pain within me."

Braz de Aviz also told the sister leaders that "women's leadership needs to grow a lot in the church," referring to a remark made by Pope Paul VI during a session of the Second Vatican Council (1962-65) -- where the late pope asked the council fathers: "Where's the other 50 percent of humanity that isn't here?"

In September, Francis spoke directly on the role of women in the church in a wide-ranging interview conducted by Jesuit Fr. Antonio Spadaro, editor in chief of the Italian Jesuit magazine La Civiltà Cattolica, and published in Jesuit magazines around the world.

"We have to work harder to develop a profound theology of the woman," said Francis in the interview. "The challenge today is this: to think about the specific place of women also in those places where the authority of the church is exercised for various areas of the church."

Political engagement: Healthcare, Syria, Immigration reform

Without a national election in the spotlight, Catholic groups in 2013 focused on broader issue areas like the implementation of the federal healthcare law and immigration reform. They also joined Pope Francis for an international day of prayer for peace in Syria, opposing possible U.S.-led military intervention in the country.

The U.S. bishops' conference in November reiterated its opposition to a U.S. Department of Health and Human Services' mandate requiring coverage of contraceptive services in healthcare plans. In a statement following their annual assembly, the full bishops conference said, "the government is refusing to uphold its obligation to respect the rights of religious believers" in pursuing the policy.

While the statement said the bishops "stand united in our resolve to resist this heavy burden," it did not specify what measures the bishops plan to take to resist the mandate, first issued in January 2012 as part of the healthcare reform law.

The mandate has been revised several times by the Obama administration since its initial release. According to the final version, any organization that self-certifies as a nonprofit religious group with religious objections to contraceptive coverage can defer coverage of contraceptives to a separate health insurance issuer.

The bishops said in several statements throughout 2013 they were concerned that while the mandate specifies that religious employers such as churches are exempted from its requirements, other groups are covered by a separate accommodation. They have also said they are concerned that the mandate does not cover for-profit businesses run by individuals who may oppose certain contraceptive services.

Throughout the year, dozens of such for-profit groups filed lawsuits against the mandate, which are working through the courts. U.S. Supreme Court Justice Sonia Sotomayor temporarily blocked part of the mandate's effect on Dec. 31, issuing an injunction in favor of the Little Sisters of the Poor, a religious order based in Colorado.

The Catholic Health Association, however, which comprises more than 600 hospitals and 1,400 long-term care and other health facilities in all 50 states, said in June that the government's final version of the mandate was sufficient to alleviate their concerns.

Pope Francis led a push for peace in Syria on Sept. 7, hosting a four-hour vigil at the Vatican with an estimated crowd of 100,000 -- forcefully declaring: "violence and war are never the way to peace!"

Francis had announced the vigil as the U.S. and other Western nations were considering launching strikes in retaliation for the alleged use of chemical weapons by the regime of Syrian President Bashar Assad.

Several U.S. bishops issued statements calling on Obama and Secretary of State John Kerry to reconsider strikes. Des Moines, Iowa, Bishop Richard Pates, who heads the U.S. bishops Committee on International Justice and Peace, said in a letter to Kerry Aug. 30 that dialogue "is the only option to put an end to the conflict and to the violence."

Other bishops also pushed for Congress to pass comprehensive immigration reform, which stalled in June after a bill passed in the Senate but could not garner enough support to even get formal consideration in the House of Representatives.

Visiting a group in Washington that were fasting on the national mall to call attention to the issue, Salt Lake City Bishop John Wester told NCR in November "this is a human issue that calls for courageous action on the parts of our elected officials. And for every day that they dally and dither and don't do anything, people are suffering."

Changes at the bishops' conference

Throughout the year, there were a number of key shifts at the U.S. bishops' conference. Most markedly, the bishops elected a new president and vice president at the end of their annual meeting in November.

Louisville, Ky., Archbishop Joseph Kurtz was elected Nov. 12 as the new president of the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops (USCCB), replacing New York Cardinal Timothy Dolan after Dolan's three-year term had ended. Houston-Galveston Cardinal Daniel DiNardo was elected the new vice president of the conference.

Kurtz had been serving as the vice president of the conference. Traditionally, the bishops every three years choose to elect their sitting vice president as the new president but they chose in 2010 to elect Dolan over then-vice president Tucson, Ariz., Bishop Gerald Kicanas.

Kurtz was elected on the first ballot by a 53 percent majority: 125 votes of the 236 cast. DiNardo was elected vice president on a third ballot runoff between him and Philadelphia Archbishop Charles Chaput. DiNardo received 63 percent on that ballot: 147 votes to Chaput's 87.

Pope Francis leads Benediction during a vigil to pray for peace in Syria in St. Peter's Square at the Vatican.

A native of Pennsylvania, Kurtz comes from a background in social work and provision of social services. The archbishop led the Allentown, Pa., diocese's social service agency for a decade and was the diocese's coordinator for health affairs for seven years before being called to the episcopate in 1999.

He first served as bishop of Knoxville, Tenn., before becoming Louisville's archbishop in 2007.

During their terms, Kurtz and DiNardo may see themselves taking on extra roles as the representatives of the U.S. episcopate, as Pope Francis has mentioned several times that bishops' conferences around the world may be given more authority to deal with matters facing Catholics in their countries.

Speaking in an October interview with NCR, St. Petersburg, Fla., Bishop Robert Lynch said, "it could well be that in the next three years ... that the principal task of the conference will be changing from a fraternal convening of mostly like-minded people on issues of consequence to some kind of preparing for a judicial role."

DiNardo said in a separate NCR interview that he is "not totally persuaded" that the U.S. bishops' conference should take on new roles, but suggested he might seek to empower the bishops' Committee on Doctrine more in its role of safeguarding church teachings.

The secretariat in Washington that carries out the work of that nine-bishop committee also went though significant changes, when its long-term executive director Capuchin Fr. Thomas Weinandy stepped down and was replaced by Jesuit Fr. Peter Ryan in May.

Weinandy, who had led the secretariat since 2005, had attracted some criticism for his role in rebukes of five prominent U.S. theologians, including St. Joseph Sr. Elizabeth Johnson, during his tenure at the conference.

Ryan, who had previously been director of spiritual formation at the St. Louis archdiocese's Kenrick-Glennon Seminary, said in an NCR interview following his appointment that he hopes to be in dialogue with those theologians but may sometimes have to make interventions to "make sure that the faith is being handed down intact."

Speaking to the American bishops during their November assembly, Archbishop Carlo Viganò, the apostolic nuncio to the U.S., urged the prelates to be witnesses rather than teachers. If a person listens to teachers, "it is because they are also witnesses," he said.

Viganò quoted from a summer meeting between Francis and Brazil's bishops, where the pontiff said, "The church is never uniformity but diversity harmonized in unity, and this is true for every ecclesial reality."

"We should also ask ourselves today a question posed by Pope Francis to the bishops of Brazil," Viganò told the Americans. "Are we still a church capable of warming hearts?"

THE OFFICIAL CATHOLIC DIRECTORY® GLOSSARY

Abbot

The superior of an autonomous community of men religious. He has general and sacramental jurisdiction over his community. The head of a prominent monastery or a congregation consisting of several monasteries is an archabbot.

Advocate

An ecclesiastical advocate is someone approved by Church authority to safeguard the rights of a party in a canonical process by arguments regarding the law and the facts of the case. [Cf. c. 1481 and CLSA Comm., p. 967]

Apostolate

Apostolate is the mission of Christ and participation in it. Its object is to bring Christ to others, its goal is the greater glory of God, its scope is universal. The work is carried out by every human agency by which the life of grace may be given or increased in the soul. A mandate from the Church is essential to the Catholic apostolate.

Archbishop

A bishop of a main or metropolitan diocese in an ecclesiastical province. The term is equivalent to metropolitan in the Western Church. It may also be granted to other ordinaries and non-residential bishops, and to the ordinary of a diocese outside a province.

Auditor

An official of a diocesan court, who gathers evidence and testimony and draws up a record of an ecclesiastical case.

Bishop

A bishop, by divine institution, carries on the work of the apostles. By reason of episcopal consecration, he shares in the triple apostolic function of teacher of doctrine, priest of sacred worship, and minister of church government. Bishops are responsible for the pastoral care of their dioceses. In addition, bishops have a responsibility to act in council to guide the Church. The term eparch is used in Eastern-rite churches.

The bishop to whom a particular or local church is entrusted is called a diocesan bishop or a residential bishop. Some other bishops receive Titular Sees over which they exercise no pastoral authority.
When the pastoral needs of a diocese or archdiocese warrant, an auxiliary bishop may be assigned to aid the residential bishop in governing his diocese. An auxiliary bishop is assigned when the residential bishop needs assistance in carrying out his duties because of ill health, advanced age, or amount of work. An auxiliary bishop does not have the right of succession within his diocese.

In special circumstances, such as the advanced age or ill health of a diocesan bishop, a coadjutator bishop may be appointed to assist the principal bishop of a diocese. Coadjutator bishops have the right of succession in the diocese of their appointment from the time the See becomes vacant upon the death or retirement of its bishop.

Brother

A man who is a member of a religious order, but is not ordained or studying for the priesthood.

Cana Conference

Censor Librorum

A theologian empowered by a bishop to judge a book's soundness in regard to Church teaching before publication.

Chancellor

The office of the chancellor (or the chancery) evolved from the practice in the early Church of appointing an official to sign and preserve the letters of the bishop. The first function of the chancellor in the present day is gathering, arranging, and safeguarding the acts of the diocesan curia. Dispensations and other official documents also originate from the chancery. In many dioceses, the chancellor continues to exercise ordinary jurisdiction as delegated by the diocesan bishop. He or she may be assisted by a separate official, the vice-chancellor.

Chapter

The general chapter of a religious order is an assembly of elected or appointed members and provincials. General chapters are convened for the election of officers, amendments to the constitution, and discussion and legislation of matters of concern to members and the order as a whole.

A provincial chapter conducts elections and handles legislation on a provincial level. The assembly is comprised of superiors and representatives of the religious.
A chapter of canons is a group of diocesan priests, appointed by the bishop of a diocese, with assigned authority or responsibilities.

College of Cardinals

The College of Cardinals is made up of the cardinals of the Church, who advise the Pope, assist in the central administration of the Church, head the various curial offices and congregations, administer the Holy See during a vacancy, and elect a new Pope. There are three ranks in the College of Cardinals, corresponding to the historical origins of cardinals in the Roman Catholic Church. All cardinals are bishops, but their rank within the College of Cardinals is characterized by one of the hierarchical ranks of bishop, priest, or deacon. Cardinals are given honorary title to churches in the city of Rome. [CF. c. 350; CLSA Comm., pp. 288-289]

1. Cardinal Bishops

There are two types of Cardinal Bishops: 1) those appointed by the Pope as titular bishops to one of the six suburban dioceses of Rome, and 2) Eastern-rite Patriarchs who are heads of Sees with apostolic origins that have been assigned to the College of Cardinals.

2. Cardinal Priests

Heads of Sees outside the city of Rome are assigned a "titular church," one of the churches in Rome. They have no pastoral authority over their titular church.

3. Cardinal Deacons

Cardinals of diaconal rank are bishops without Sees who head the various departments, offices, congregations, committees, and the Secretariat of State of the Roman Curia.

Confraternity of Christian Doctrine [CCD]

A lay organization established for religious education throughout a person's entire life. The term is currently used to describe Catholic parish-based religious education of children from kindergarten through high school. At the diocesan level, the offices are now more commonly known as offices of religious education or Christian formation. Nationally, the confraternity's religious education component has been taken over by the USCCB's Department of Education. It still exists as a separate entity under the USCCB Administrative Board, with responsibility for licensing religious and spiritual literature.

Consolidated School

The term, as used in the Directory, may refer to a school that takes students from more than one parish, or a school that was formed by the consolidation of two or three other schools. In both cases, it is a means of keeping a Catholic school in a given area open by taking students from the surrounding areas, regardless of parish boundaries.

Convent

In common usage, the term refers to a house of women religious. Originally, it referred to a building where members of religious institutes lived, and was not restricted to communities of women.

Cursillo

The cursillo de cristianidad, or "little course in Christianity," is a three-day program for achieving spiritual renewal or spiritual awakening. It seeks to convey a new sense of individual and organized apostolic action. The program, conducted by priests and laypeople, consists of a three-day weekend focused on prayer, study, and Christian action, and a follow-up program known as the post-cursillo.

Deacons

The diaconate is the first order or grade in ordained ministry. Its origins are in early apostolic times, when deacons preached and baptized under the direction of the presbyters or bishops. Any man who is to be ordained to the priesthood must first be ordained as a transitional deacon. Deacons serve in the ministry of liturgy, of the word, and of charity.

In 1967, Pope Paul VI reinstituted the Permanent Diaconate for men who do not plan to become ordained priests. Although men ordained as permanent deacons are sometimes referred to as "married deacons," the permanent diaconate is open to both married and unmarried men, with the understanding that after ordination, they may not marry even after the death of a spouse. Under the authority of the diocesan bishop, they perform the same functions as the transitional deacons while, at the same time, retaining their roles in society as family and business men.

Dean/Vicar Forane

The title of a priest appointed by the bishop to aid him in administering the parishes in a certain vicinity, called a "deanery," or "vicariates forane." The function of a dean, or vicar forane, involves promotion, coordination, and supervision of the common pastoral activity within the deanery or vicariate.

Defender of the Bond

A member of a diocesan tribunal, either a cleric or a lay person, holding a graduate degree in canon law, who is appointed by the diocesan bishop for cases concerning the nullity of sacred ordination or the nullity or dissolution of the marriage bond. The defender of the bond is responsible for a review of the evidence, scrutiny of the briefs, examination of witnesses, and maintenance of proper procedures during the trial. The defender also deals with some situations concerning the content of the litigation rather than the legal procedures.

Diocesan Consultors

An advisory council of diocesan priests, as appointed by a diocesan bishop, that assists in the administrative affairs of the diocese.

Diocesan Curia

The personnel and offices assisting the diocesan bishop in directing the pastoral activity, administration, and the exercise of judicial power of his diocese. The curia includes among its officers laity and religious as well as clergy. Principal officers of a diocesan curia are the vicar general of the diocese, the chancellor, officials of the diocesan tribunal, examiners, consultors, auditors, the promoter of justice and the defender of the bond.

Diocese

The standard term for a territorial division of the Church, entrusted to a bishop who rules in his own name as local ordinary, and not as a delegate of another. The chief diocese of a province is an archdiocese. It is headed by an archbishop. A diocese is usually limited to a definite territory so that it comprises all the faithful who inhabit that territory. [Cf. cc. 369 and 372, #1] In Eastern-rite churches, the term eparchy is used.

Eastern-rite [Oriental] Church

The term used to describe the Catholic churches which developed in Eastern Europe, Asia, and Africa. The Eastern-rite churches have their own distinctive liturgical and organizational systems. Each is considered equal to the Latin rite within the Church.

Eastern Catholic Association

All Eastern Catholic Bishops, diocesan bishops (and their equivalent in law) and auxiliaries are members. The Association represents the Armenian, Chaldean, Maronite Melikite, Romanian, Ruthenian and Ukrainian Churches. The Syriac, Syro-Malabar and Russian churches are also represented but without a bishop member since they are presently have no established hierarchy in the United States.

Ecumenism/Ecumenical Movement

A movement for spiritual understanding and unity among Christians and their churches. The term is also extended to apply to efforts toward greater understanding and cooperation between Christians and members of other faiths.

Military Ordinariate [Archdiocese for the Military Services, U.S.A.]

A nonterritorial diocese for American Catholics and their dependents who are in the military or affiliated with the armed forces. Personnel employed by or engaged in diplomatic missions for the U.S. government in countries where U.S. military forces are stationed also belong to the Military Ordinariate.

Mission

A mission, or quasi-parish, is a parish which has not been established because it lacks one or more of the following qualifications: a resident pastor; necessary financial resources; territorial boundaries; or a natural grouping by way of rite, nationality, or language. The organization was founded in 1928 and in 1950, it received Vatican approval as a secular institution. In 1982, it was designated a personal prelature, the Prelature of the Holy Cross and Opus Dei. Members are not members of a religious order, do not take vows, and do not live in community.

Ordinary

Diocesan bishops, religious superiors, and certain other diocesan authorities with jurisdiction over the clergy in a specific geographical area, or the members of a religious order.

Ordination/Ordain

The sacramental rite by which a "sacred order" is conferred (diaconate, priesthood, episcopacy).

Papal Audience

Request for attendance at papal audiences and similar functions may be addressed to: Bishops' Office for United States Visitors to the Vatican. Postal address: North American College, Via dell 'Umilta 30, 00187 Rome, Italy. Tel.: 011-39-06-6900-1821; Fax: 011-39-06-679-1448.

Papal Representatives

There are three types of representatives of the Roman Pontiff:

1) those who represent him to particular churches and civil government;

2) those who represent him to particular churches;

3) those who represent him in international organizations or at various conferences and meetings. [Cf. c. 363; CLSA Comm., p. 302]

1. Apostolic Nuncio

In the United States, the papal representative is sent by the Pope to both the local church and to the government. His title is Apostolic Nuncio.

2. Legate

An individual appointed by the Pope to be his personal representative to a nation, international conference, or local church. The legate may be chosen from the local clergy of a country.

3. Permanent Observer to the United Nations

The Apostolic See maintains permanent legates below the ambassadorial level to several world organizations. Since the papal representative does not enjoy the right to vote within the organization, his title at the United Nations is that of Observer.

Parish

A specific community of the Christian faithful within a diocese, which has its own church building, under the authority of a pastor who is responsible for providing them with ministerial service. Most parishes are formed on a geographic basis, but they may be formed along national or ethnic lines.

Parish Coordinator

A deacon, religious, or lay person who is responsible for the pastoral care of parish. The parish coordinator is in charge of the day-to-day life of the parish in the areas of worship, education, pastoral service and administration.

Pastor

A priest in charge of a parish or congregation. He is responsible for administering the sacraments, instructing the congregation in the doctrine of the Church, and other services to the people of the parish.

Pastoral Associate

A member of the laity who is part of a parish ministry team.

Pastoral Council

A consultative body which the pastor or bishop consults concerning the pastoral activity within the diocese. Its members include laity, religious, and clergy. The pastoral council's purpose is to study practical situations, difficulties and problems, and make concrete recommendations and proposals to the diocesan bishop. The pastoral council is always subject to the final authority of the pastor or bishop.

Patriarch

The Pope is the traditional "Patriarch of the West." All other bishops in the Latin Rite, even those with the honorary title of "Patriarch," are subject to him. Similarly, patriarchs within nations have only an honorary title unless special provisions are made otherwise. Eastern-rite Patriarchs are subject to the Pope while serving as heads of the faithful belonging to their rites throughout the world.

Personal Prelature

In addition to the territorial arrangement of the Church into particular or local churches or dioceses, canon law also provides for non-territorial areas of religious jurisdiction, incorporating secular clergy and deacons. Membership is also open to lay persons. These prelatures are established to meet specific pastoral or missionary needs at the regional, national, or international level without infringing on the rights of the local bishops. A prelature is presided over by a personal prelate, who is an ordinary with the right to establish seminaries and ordain priests as members of the prelature.

Canon law also allows for laity to be associated in the works of prelatures without being withdrawn from the jurisdiction of their own diocesan bishop.

Personal prelatures are jurisdictional structures of a secular type which are established by the Holy See as an instrument within the hierarchical pastoral work of the Church to carry out special pastoral or missionary tasks. Personal prelatures are based on the principle of insertion into the local Church. In this they differ essentially from the personal dioceses, such as those constituted for the faithful of a particular rite, which are based on the principle of independence or autonomy in regard to local Churches.

Vatican II provided for setting up personal prelatures (see Decree, Presbyterorum ordinis, no. 10). Additional norms were established in subsequent pontifical legislation (see Motu proprio Ecclesiae Sanctae no. 1, no. 4, August 6, 1966 and the Apostolic Constitution Regimini Ecclesiae Universae, no. 49, no. 1, Aug. 15, 1967). General legislation concerning personal prelatures is contained in canons 294 to 297 of the 1983 Code of Canon Law.

Personal prelatures are to be established by the Holy See after hearing the views of the respective Episcopal Conferences (can. 294). They are governed by a Prelate according to statutes given by the Holy See. The Prelate is their proper Ordinary, who may incardinate priests and must look after their spiritual and temporal welfare (can. 295). Lay people can dedicate themselves by means of a contractual agreement, to the apostolic activities of the prelature; the statutes are to specify the manner of this organic cooperation (can. 296). And the statutes are also to determine the relations of the prelature with the Ordinaries of the places in which the prelature works, with the prior consent of the Ordinaries (can. 297).

Presbyteral Council

Also known as the priests' council, the presbyteral council is the principal consultative body mandated by the Code of Canon Law to advise the diocesan bishop in matters of pastoral governance. It consists of bishops and priests serving the diocese.

The organization has responsibility for fostering missionary vocations, assigning missionaries to field work, defining ecclesiastical boundaries and assigning clergy to them, and encouraging training and installation of native-born clergy.

Promoter of Justice

A cleric or lay person, holding a graduate degree in canon law, who is appointed by the diocesan bishop to serve in the role of a "prosecuting attorney" in trials of crimes against church law and of other judicial litigations in the diocese. A promoter of justice may be appointed for a specific case by the bishop.

Province

A defined geographic area containing an archdiocese, or Metropolitan See, and at least one diocese, or Suffragen See. The archbishop of the archdiocese has no direct powers over the Suffragen Sees, but does have limited advisory and appellate authority and obligations. The term also refers to a territorial grouping of particular churches or communities, or a territory of a religious order.

Provincial

The superior of the communities of a religious order that constitute a province.

Provincial Council

An assembly of the bishops of an ecclesiastical province, called by the metropolitan archbishop. The term is also used in reference to the provincial superior of a province, along with his or her chief advisors.

Receptions into the Church

Can take two forms: baptism of those not previously validly baptized, or "reception into full communion" with the Church for those who have already been baptized, in which case a profession of faith affects the reception.

Religious Education Department

The ECA has established the ECDD-The Eastern Conference of Diocesan Directors of Religious Education which oversees, through God With Us Publications, all publications of catechtical materials published by it and used in Eastern Catholic Churches, mainly of Byzantine tradition.

Religious Priest/Diocesan Priest

Religious, or regular, priests are those who are professed members of a religious order or institute. Religious clergy live according to the rule of their respective orders. In pastoral ministry, they are under the jurisdiction of their local bishop, as well as the superiors of their order. Diocesan, or secular, priests are under the direction of their local bishop. They commit to serving their congregations and other institutions.

Retreat

A period of time spent in meditation and religious exercise. Retreats may take various forms, from traditional closed forms, to open retreats, which do not disengage the participants from day-to-day life. Both clergy and lay people of all ages participate in retreats. Houses and centers providing facilities for retreats are retreat houses.

Rite of Christian Initiation of Adults [RCIA]

Roman Curia

The official collective name for the administrative agencies and courts, and their officials, who assist the Pope in governing the Church. Members are appointed and granted authority by the Pope.

Scholastic Teaching

Usually refers to Scholastic Philosophy, which is the basis for much Catholic Theology. It comes from the canonical "schools" of the 12th-13th centuries, St. Thomas Aquinas, St. Bonaventure, St. Albert the Great, etc., who developed "scholasticism" based mainly on Aristotle. It is the semi-official philosophy of the Church.

Secular Institute

Canonically erected institute of consecrated life for single laity and clerics who strive for the perfection of charity and work for the sanctification of the world while remaining in a lifestyle within the world.

See

The word is taken from the Latin word "sedes" ("seat"), and is used to denote a diocese or ecclesiastical district. The term Holy See is reserved to the diocese of Rome whose bishop is the Pope. U.S. Territorial Sees are dioceses located on territory of the United States of America, but are members of episcopal conferences other than the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Seminary

An educational institution for men preparing for Holy Orders. The term originates from the time of St. Augustine, when those preparing for the priesthood were educated in the "cathedral school." During the Middle Ages, the clergy were educated in a university setting where faculties of philosophy, theology, and canon law existed. Eventually individual dioceses or provinces came to establish their own schools for educating their clerical students. Traditional seminaries date from the Council of Trent in the 16th century.

A school for the spiritual, academic, and pastoral education and formation of priesthood candidates is known as a major seminary in which the focus is on philosophical and theological education. To prepare for entrance into a major seminary, a period of study is set aside for the required courses in the humanities and the sciences in institutions called minor seminaries.

Serra Club

Local units of Serra International, an organization which promotes vocations to the priesthood and religious life, and offers instruction to lay leaders.

Sister

The term, in the strictest sense, refers to women religious who belong to institutes which have professed simple vows. However, in everyday usage, the term is used for any woman religious.

Sodality

A group of laity established for the promotion of Christian life and worship, or some other religious purpose.

Special Centers for Social Services

This would seem to overlap with Specialized Homes. Some of the categorization is fairly arbitrary. Catholic Charities might have its own proper distinctions for government or private funding purposes.

Specialized Homes

Includes such institutions as homes for handicapped (e.g., Misericordia Homes), youth homes (e.g., Maryville, Mercy Boys and Girls, Homes), homes for battered women, drug rehab centers, homes for unwed mothers, etc.

2. Synod of Oriental Churches

The synods of the Oriental Churches enjoy various prerogatives including the right to elect bishops, regulate discipline and exercise pastoral authority in their respective churches.

Tribunal

A tribunal (court) is the name given to the person or persons who exercise the Church's judicial powers. By its very nature, this procedure involves the determination of a legal controversy. A major concern of tribunals is conducting the process leading to the dissolution or annulment of marriages. In ecclesiastical matters, definite procedural norms for conducting a trial are found in the Code of Canon Law to settle disputes. There are various grades of tribunals, including diocesan tribunals, the first court of trial for most cases; regional and metropolitan tribunals, located in an archdiocese, the appellate court for all cases tried within the province; and the tribunals of the Holy See, which act as the Church's central appellate court, try cases reserved to the Holy See, deal with questions of procedure and jurisdiction o the other courts, and act as the Church's supreme court.

United States Conference of Catholic Bishops

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops is a permanent institute composed of Catholic bishops of the United States of America in and through which the bishops exercise in a communal or collegial manner the pastora mission entrusted to them by the Lord Jesus of sanctification, teaching, and leadership, especially by devising forms and methods of the apostolate suitably adapted to the circumstances of the times. Such exercise is intended to offer appropriate assistance to each bishop in fulfilling his particular ministry in the local Church, to effect a commonality of ministry addressed to the people of the United States of America, and to foster and express communion with the Church in other nations within the Church universal, under the leadership of its chief pastor, The Pope.

Vicar

The appointment of a priest or a bishop as an episcopal vicar is an option given to a diocesan bishop when he needs a deputy for governing a specific territory within the diocese, a group of persons or a specific rite, or a type of apostolic work within the diocese.

By Church law, the diocesan bishop is the judge of all cases in the diocesan tribunal of first trial. He must appoint a priest with ordinary power to judge cases not reserved to the bishop himself. This priest must have a graduate degree in canon law. He is called the judicial vicar, and is sometimes referred to as the chief judge or officialis. He may be given another priest as an assistant with the title of adjutant judicial vicar.

A bishop or priest appointed to participate in the executive (administrative) governance of the diocese with executive jurisdiction as a deputy of the diocesan bishop is a vicar general. The appointment of a vicar general is mandatory for every diocese. This office is designed to facilitate and unify diocesan administration.

Vicar for Religious

A priest appointed by a bishop to act as his representative in dealing with the religious communities in his diocese.

PART I

Hierarchy of the Catholic Church

The Hierarchy, as the supreme governing body of the Catholic Church, consists of the Roman Pontiff, the successor of Peter, and the Bishops joined together with him and never without him (canons 330,331,336) in one apostolic college to provide for the common good of the Church. The Roman Pontiff in the exercise of his office is assisted by the College of Cardinals, and further by the departments also called "dicasteries" of the Roman Curia. The Bishops, of whom some bear the titles of Patriarch and Archbishop, are united with the Roman Pontiff in the governance of the whole Church; the Bishops, when assigned to particular Sees, are individually responsible for the teaching, sanctification and governance of their particular Church. Apostolic Vicars and Prefects together with certain Abbots and other Prelates are also joined in this work.

HIS HOLINESS THE POPE

Bishop of Rome and Vicar of Jesus Christ,
Successor of St. Peter, Prince of the Apostles,
Supreme Pontiff of the Universal Church.
Primate of Italy.
Archbishop and Metropolitan of the Roman Province,
Sovereign of Vatican City State.
Servant of the Servants of God

Francis

JORGE MARIO BERGOGLIO, S.J.

The present successor of St. Peter was born in Buenos Aires on December 17, 1936; ordained for the Jesuits on December 13, 1969; appointed Auxiliary Bishop of Buenos Aires on May 20, 1992, receiving Episcopal consecration on June 27, 1992; appointed Coadjutor Archbishop of Buenos Aires on June 3, 1997 and succeeded Cardinal Antonio Quarracino on February 28, 1998; Created and proclaimed Cardinal by the Blessed John Paul II in the consistory of February 21, 2001. Elected Pope, March 13, 2013; installed March 19, 2013.

VATICAN CITY

Vatican City is the smallest state in the world, occupying 108.7 acres, of which about one third is covered with buildings and is situated on the right side of the Tiber River. Vatican City has territory, population, and sovereignty. This territory, limited as it is, suffices to guarantee the spiritual and temporal independence needed for the exercise of the Holy See's spiritual mission. In 1870 the Kingdom of Italy seized all Vatican possessions which for several centuries had constituted the papal temporal domain. But even after 1870 the Holy See continued to regard itself as a separate entity in international law, and was recognized as such by numerous states with which it retained normal diplomatic relations. After long discussions the Holy See and the then Kingdom of Italy signed the Lateran Pacts on February 11, 1929, so that the complete and independent authority of the Vatican State was and is recognized by the Italian state.

The Sovereign of this small state is His Holiness, the Pope.

The government presently is administered by a Pontifical Commission of which His Eminence Giuseppe Cardinal Bertello is President.

THE COLLEGE OF CARDINALS

The Cardinals constitute a special college and they assist the Roman Pontiff collegially when they are called together to deal with questions of major importance; they do so individually when they assist the Pope especially in the daily care of the universal Church by means of the different offices which they perform (canons 349-350). The Cardinals who are under eighty years of age elect his successor.

The College of Cardinals is divided into three ranks: Cardinal-Bishops, Cardinal-Priests, and Cardinal-Deacons. The College of Cardinals, when complete formerly consisted of 70 members: 6 Cardinal Bishops, 50 Cardinal Priests and 14 Cardinal Deacons, but the late Pontiffs, Pope John XXIII and Pope Paul VI enlarged the College of Cardinals. At the moment the maximum number of Cardinal electors (those under 80 years of age) must not exceed 120.

The Cardinal Bishops (except the Patriarch-Cardinals of the Oriental Rites), have as Titular Sees the Suburban Sees of Rome, which are: Porto Santa Rufina, Albano, Palestrina, Sabina, Frascati, Velletri, Segni. The Cardinal Dean has united to his See the See of Ostia. The Cardinal Priests take their title from the Titular Churches to which they are appointed: the Cardinal Deacons are appointed to other Churches called Deaconries. The first Cardinal Bishop is Dean; the first Cardinal Priest is First Priest; and the first Cardinal Deacon is First Deacon of the Sacred College. The Dean has the right of ordaining the new Pope if he is not already a bishop; the First Deacon has the right of proclaiming him and investing him with the sacred Pallium. On the death of the Pontiff, the Cardinal Camerlengo has the Administration of the affairs of the Holy See.

Sometimes the Roman Pontiff promotes a person to the dignity of Cardinal but does not make public his name and keeps it in pectore. Upon the publication of his name, this Cardinal enjoys his right of precedence from the day on which his name was reserved in pectore by the Pope (cfr. Can. 351¶ 3).

The Roman Curia

The present norms regarding the Roman Curia were publicly announced June 28, 1988, in the Pastor Bonus - Constitutio Apostolica de Romana Curia, and published in A.A.S. LXXX/1988, Commentarium Officiale: pp. 841-934. The Supreme Pontiff usually conducts business of the universal Church by means of the Roman Curia, which fulfills its duty in his name and by his authority for the good and the service of the Churches; it consists of the Secretariat of State or the Papal Secretariat, congregations, tribunals and other institutions, whose structure and competency are defined in special law (can. 360). The Roman curia is the complex of departments and institutes which assist the Roman Pontiff in the exercise of his supreme pastoral function for the good and service of the universal Church and of the particular churches, by which the unity of faith and communion of the people of God is strengthened and the mission is promoted which is proper to the Church in the world.

I. SECRETARIAT OF STATE

The Secretariat of State

The Secretariat of State is the dicastery of the Roman Curia which works most closely with the Supreme Pontiff in the exercise of his universal mission (Pastor Bonus, Art. 39). The Secretariat of State is presided over by a Cardinal who assumes the title of Secretary of State. As the Pope's first Collaborator in the governance of the universal Church, the Cardinal Secretary of State is the one primarily responsible for the diplomatic and political activity of the Holy See, in some circumstances representing the person of the Supreme Pontiff himself.

The Secretariat of State includes two sections, namely: the First Section that is headed by an Archbishop, the Substitute for General Affairs, assisted by a Prelate, the Assessor for General Affairs; and the Second Section of the Secretariat of State headed by an Archbishop, the Secretary for Relations with States, aided by a Prelate, the Under-Secretary for Relations with States, and assisted by Cardinals and Bishops.

Secretary of State: His Eminence Tarcisio Cardinal Bertone.
Office: Apostolic Palace, 00120 Vatican City State, Europe. Tel: 06-69.88.39.13; Fax: 06-69.88.52.55.

First Section: For General Affairs

In conformity with Arts. 41-44 of Pastor Bonus, the Section for General Affairs or the First Section is responsible for handling matters regarding the everyday service of the Supreme Pontiff, both in caring for the universal Church and in dealing with the dicasteries of the Roman Curia. It attends to the preparation of whatever documents the Holy Father entrusts to it. It enacts the provisions for appointments within the Roman Curia and keeps custody of the Lead Seal and the Fisherman's Ring. It regulates the duties and activity of the Holy See's Representatives, especially in relation to the local Churches. It attends to all that concerns the Embassies accredited to the Holy See. It supervises the Holy See's official communication agencies and is responsible for publishing the "Acta Apostolicae Sedis" and the "Annuario Pontificio".

Substitute: Most Rev. Archbishop Giovanni Angelo Becciu.
Assessor: Rev. Msgr. Peter Bryan Wells.

Second Section: For Relations with States

On the basis of Arts. 45-47 of Pastor Bonus, the Section for Relations with States or Second Section has the specific duty of attending to matters which involve civil governments. It has responsibility for the Holy See's diplomatic relations with States, including the establishing of Concordats or similar agreements; for the Holy See's presence in international organizations and conferences; in special circumstances, by order of the Supreme Pontiff and in consultation with the competent dicasteries of the Curia, provides for appointments to particular Churches, and for their establishment or modification; in close collaboration with the Congregation for Bishops, it attends to the appointment of Bishops in countries which have entered into treaties or agreements with the Holy See in accordance with the norms of international law.

The departments are juridically equal among themselves. Attached to the institutes of the Roman Curia are the Prefecture of the Papal Household and the Office of Liturgical Celebrations of the Supreme Pontiff.

The Congregation for the Doctrine of the Faith

The proper function of the Congregation on the Doctrine of the Faith is to promote and safeguard the doctrine of faith and morals in the whole Catholic world; therefore, those things belong to it which touch this matter in any way. Fulfilling the function of promoting doctrine, it fosters studies in order that the understanding of the faith might grow and that a response can be prepared under the light of faith for new questions arising from developments in science and human culture. It is a help to bishops, whether individually or gathered in assemblies, in the exercise of the function by which they are constituted authentic teachers and doctors of the faith as well as the office by which they are held to safeguard and promote the integrity of that faith. This Sacred Congregation reproves doctrines opposed to the principles of the faith after the interested Bishops of a region have been heard. It studies the books referred to it and, if necessary, reproves them after the author has been heard and has had an opportunity to defend himself and after the Ordinary has been forewarned. It also examines whatever concerns "the privilege of the faith" whether in law and in fact. It is competent to pass judgment on errors about the faith according to the norms of an ordinary process. It safeguards the dignity of the sacrament of Penance. The Congregation proceeds administratively or judicially according to the nature of the question to be treated.

Territories in which a major part of the Christians belong to Oriental rites are subject only to this Congregation. Even in Latin territories it carefully supervises the faithful of Oriental rites and provides as much as possible for their spiritual needs even by the establishment of their own hierarchy if the number of faithful and circumstances require this.

The Catholic Church in the United States

The organizational structure of the Catholic Church in the United States consists of 33 Provinces with as many Archdioceses (Metropolitan Sees); 149 Suffragan Sees (Dioceses); The Military Archdiocese; four Eastern-Rite jurisdictions immediately subject to the Holy See in Rome. The Eparchies of St. Maron (Maronites), Newton (Melkites), St. Thomas the Apostle of Detroit (Chaldeans) and St. George Martyr of Canton, Ohio (Romanians), St. Thomas of Chicago of the Syro-Malabarians. Each of these jurisdictions is under the direction of an Archbishop and Bishop called an Ordinary, who has apostolic responsibility and authority for the pastoral service of the people in his care.

The structure includes the territorial episcopal conference known as the United States Conference of Catholic Bishops. In and through this body, which is strictly ecclesiastical and has defined juridical authority, the Bishops exercise their collegiate pastorate over the Church in the entire country.

Related to the USCCB is the civil corporation and operational secretariat through which the Bishops, in cooperation with other members of the Church, act on a wider-than-ecclesiastical scale for the good of the Church and society in the United States.

United States Conference of Catholic Bishops

Address—3211 Fourth St., N.E., Washington, DC 20017-1194. Tel: 202-541-3000; Web Site: www.usccb.org.

The United States Conference of Catholic Bishops is a permanent institute composed of Catholic bishops of the United States of America in and through which the bishops exercise in a communal or collegial manner the pastoral mission entrusted to them by the Lord Jesus of sanctification, teaching, and leadership, especially by devising forms and methods of the apostolate suitably adapted to the circumstances of the times. Such exercise is intended to offer appropriate assistance to each bishop in fulfilling his particular ministry in the local Church, to effect a commonality of ministry addressed to the people of the United States of America, and to foster and express communion with the Church in other nations within the Church universal, under the leadership of its chief pastor, the Pope.

Catholic Relief Services is the official international humanitarian agency of the Catholic community in the United States. CRS alleviates suffering and provides assistance to people in need in nearly 91 countries, without regard to race, religion or nationality.

CRS was founded in 1943 by the bishops of the United States to assist the poor and disadvantaged outside this country — helping people in need for more than 65 years.

CRS is efficient and effective directing more than 93 percent of the agency's expenditures directly to programs that benefit the poor overseas. Our agency touches more than 100 million lives, by addressing the root causes and effects of poverty, promoting human dignity, and helping to build more just and peaceful societies.

Our relief and development work is accomplished through programs of emergency response, HIV, health, agriculture, education, microfinance and peacebuilding.

We serve Catholics in the United States by inviting them to live out their faith as part of one human family.

The mission of the National Catholic Conference for Total Stewardship (NCCTS) is to initiate in dioceses and parishes the concept of total stewardship through a pastoral process called Celebrating Life as a Catholic Christian (CLCC). The concept joins the three basic elements of the bible: Evangelization, Discipleship and Service, and through the CLCC process presents them as a single unit not as separate apostolates. The CLCC manual defines the 3 elements, choosing key paragraphs and explanatory excerpts from 20 modern day papal documents. The process first updates active church-going Catholics in sound catechesis and eucharistic spirituality. At the same time the process prepares and motivates them to reach out to lapsed, non-regular church-going Catholics making person-to-person contact with them and with RCIA graduates. They join a Small Ecclesial Faith Community (SEFC) connected to the parish. Active parishoners in SEFCs constitute a welcoming environment for those in need of returning to the faith and those in need of retaining it. In them they experience Catholic fellowship, inter-personal sharing, communal and personal prayer and study official church teachings. Through the CLCC process returnees and recent converts are further formed in doctrine and spirituality for active membership in the Church, for encountering Christ in the sacraments, for enjoying "communion" with all Catholics and for Celebrating Life as Catholic Christians both in vocation and mission.

GUIDANCE IN GIVING, INC.

Full Service Stewardship, Development & Campaign Consultants

Fundraising is not just about raising money, it is about being stewards of the faith.

As a full-service Catholic organization involved solely with developing programs for parishes, dioceses and schools, we have the experience and expertise to design a successful Stewardship-based capital campaign for your parish.

Guidance In Giving, Inc. offers its parish clients full-service campaign direction that is customized to the needs of each community. The firm understands that today's pastor faces many challenges. The challenges involve not only meeting the spiritual needs of his parishioners, but also the temporal needs of his parish. By designing and implementing an organized campaign plan, Guidance In Giving, Inc. aims to effectively use the time of pastors, parish staff and lay leadership to achieve the maximum financial potential. Our full-time, on-site service alleviates the worry that is sometimes associated with a fundraising campaign and allows parish leadership to concentrate on its most important mission, that of serving its people.

In a successful Stewardship-based capital campaign, every Catholic family is challenged to give prayerfully and proportionately to the best of their financial ability over a period of three to five years. Each and every gift is vitally important; therefore, a key element of the campaign is to provide everyone the opportunity to make a decision after they have learned about the parish's needs. The most effective manner of educating each parish family and raising the maximum amount of funds is through personal education and solicitation. These personal solicitations can be done via visitation as well as small and large group receptions. These are the most commonly employed and most successful methods of raising funds.
